HARLEE BRANCH TELLS OF CONLEY PANTOMINE

Harlice Branch, a newspaper man who was present when James Conley, the negro sweeper of the National Pencil factory, went through for the police a pantonline of what he claims occurred on the day of the murder when he says he aided Leo Frank in hiding the body of Mary Phagan, was the first witness called to the stand lionday morning.

Mr. Branch had been on the stand saturday, but had not finished his tostimony when court adjourned. Through his statements as to the time, Attorney Reuben Arnold drew the conclusion that 19 minutes must have elapsed while Conley was enacting the motions through which he claims to have gone with Frank.
