NEGRO LOOKED UPON AS A TOOL NOT PRINCIPAL DECLARE DETECTIVES WHO HAVE QUESTIONED HIM

Chief Beavers Confers With Judge Roan in Reference to Taking Conley to Toward to Confront Frank but It Told That It is a Question for Sheriff to Decide—No Effort in This Direction Likely Until Mr. Rosser Returns to City

Write "night-walker" — the city detectives are said to have written James Conley, negro weaver at the pencil factory, the following notes:

The result is said to have been "blackish." Since the case found under the dead body of Mary Phagan, the detectives regard this strongly corroborative of Conley's statement that he himself fired the shot which killed her. Conley declares that he wrote them, however, at the direction of Leo M. Frank, superintendent of the pencil factory, under indictment for the murder. The negro is said to have been in the factory on Friday afternoon at 11:30, and he was seen in the factory at 12:30, and he was seen in the factory at 1:30.

A new and lengthy affidavit, going into detail in substance throughout the case, was sworn to by the negro on Saturday morning at the headquarters of the state police, as he could remember best, his actions and movements upon that day.

Shortly after 10 o'clock he was standing at the corner of Fourth and Hudson streets, he now swears, when Leo M. Frank approached at the factory, his employer, came past, going toward Monday morning. Mr. Frank told him to go to the store, and he went to the store. He then returned to the factory and took him to the office. He was there when the shooting occurred.

He would call with a witness, said Mr. Frank, when he wanted the negro. He would call with a witness, said Mr. Frank, when he wanted the negro.

Conley continued to testify in his affidavit. It is said, describing how he entered and left the factory, how he saw the negro, how he saw the negro, how he saw the negro, how he saw the negro.

Conley's affidavit was sworn to before Judge Roan. The judge is said to have been satisfied with the testimony.
