WILLIAM SMITH TELLS WHY HIS OPINION HAS CHANGED AS TO GUILT OF LEO FRANK

In Exhaustive Statement, Former Lawyer for Negro Picks Many Alleged Flaws in Story Sweeper Told on Stand, and Gives Number of Instances in Which He Says He Departed From Truth—Never Believed Pervert Story, He Asserts.

TELLS OF TRAP LAID FOR CONLEY WHEN NEGRO WAS IN FULTON JAIL

Smith Now Allies Himself With Frank Defense and Confidently Expects Prisoner Will Secure Liberty—Believes Conley Guilty, But He Is Now Free From Further Penalty of the Law. Lanford Says He Is Open to Conviction.

Attorney William M. Smith, counsel for Jim Conley, whose statement in Saturday's Constitution that he believed Leo M. Frank innocent of the murder of Mary Phagan created the newest Frank case sensation has issued a public statement in which he explains his change of opinion.

He attributes it to constant and exhaustive study of the case in which he catalogued card indexed and filed for research purposes huge volumes of Frank evidence. In this he was aided by his wife, who had never fixed a definite belief in the famous case, and who was instrumental in influencing her husband to the changed attitude.

In his latest card Mr. Smith declares that he had always felt a certain amount of suspicion toward his client and that there were many mysterious angles of the negro's connection with the crime which are still unexplained to his personal satisfaction. He explains his delay in making public his opinion because of the short length of time that has lapsed since he severed all connection with Conley as legal counsel.

WILL FIGHT TO FREE FRANK

He gives many interesting points of the case in which he says he bases his new conviction. He states that it is his duty to fight for the liberation of the white man but declares that the only no possible way by which Jim Conley could be held with for the murder of the negro Frank, already been convicted and sentenced for capital crime.

Mr. Smith has prepared data and let it to his wife to send out to influential men and persons of letters throughout the country in an effort to bring to the attention of the public the facts of the case. He has now allied himself with the Frank defense and avers that it is only a question of time until Frank will be cleared of the crime and will be given freedom. The results of investigations now in progress he says he will make public in proper time.

SMITH'S STATEMENT

Following is the attorney's statement. The unfortunate public given my personal opinion as to the Frank case is much to be regretted. My personal opinion is not extreme and legally should not have a feather's weight. It was never my purpose unless absolutely necessary to save human life, to give public expression of my views. Such publications as occurred to me it was my intention to privately offer, through official action of the public agencies of the law.

In an effort to inspire further search I was compelled to speak in confidence to some in whom I had every right to rely. There has been a wide dissemination of my views, possibly through some misunderstanding. I am sure that the public will be able to distinguish between what I said and what I intended to say. I am sure that the public will be able to distinguish between what I said and what I intended to say. I am sure that the public will be able to distinguish between what I said and what I intended to say.

BELIEVES COUNCIL WILL PASS SHEET WITHOUT CHANGES

Action by the general council on Monday on the October appropriation sheet which carries $11,812 for additional grammar grade and high school teachers is awaited by superintendent W. M. Slaton and members of the board of education before plans for the abolition of the double session system are put into effect.

Members of the school board Saturday expressed the belief that if the sheet passes through council and the superintendent's board it will be approved by Mayor Woodward. The various city departments who have been waiting patiently for additional funds to carry out their work at the end of the year are also hopeful that the mayor will let the sheet go through.

Superintendent Slaton will assign teachers to the additional classes just as soon as he is reasonably certain that the $11,812 appropriation for the additional teachers has been passed. No one in Atlanta realized more than I did the necessity of breaking the street fund of $2,000 which according to Slaton said recently and I am going to do all in my power to get a system arranged just as soon as possible.

Of other operations on this front, which extends as far north as Arras nothing has been disclosed since the French themselves announced that their force debouching from Arras had fallen back slightly on the east and north of that town.

GERMANS PREPARE TO GUARD FLANK

There is evidence from other sources that the Germans are making preparations to protect their flank, should retirement become necessary. They have evacuated West Flanders and their attack on Antwerp is believed by many to be designed to keep the Belgians busy and prevent them from operating on what would be General Von Kluck's left should he fall back through Belgium.

But the battle is not yet over and it may be many days before either side attains its objective except for the forces absolutely needed elsewhere. The Germans are maintaining their strength in France and besides fighting off the French efforts on their

SOUTHERN CHIEFS BACK CARRANZA

They Refuse to Receive His Resignation After Heated Debate and Ask Him to Accept Supreme Power.

Mexico City, October 3.—Shortly before midnight tonight delegates to the general conference of southern chiefs rejected by an almost unanimous vote the resignation of General Venustiano Carranza as first chief of the constitutionalists.

The resignation was laid before the convention early tonight and the vote followed a heated debate.

A commission was sent to the national palace to ask General Carranza again to accept supreme power.

WASHINGTON BELIEVES PEACE IS CERTAIN

Washington, October 3.—Advices to the state department today further assured administration officials that a peaceful settlement of Mexico's latest difficulties would result from the Aguas Calientes conference to convene October 5.

General Hanna at Monterey reported there appears to be a better understanding between all Mexican officials than before.

The conference of generals now in session at the Mexican capital he said would adjourn to hold open caucuses with representatives of General Villa, at Aguas Calientes beginning October 5.

The authorities in Mexico City were said to be hopeful that an agreement would be reached between the Carranza-Villa factions at Aguas Calientes, which would assure the re-establishment of friendly relations between the two leaders.

Good Order Prevails. The state department is in receipt of official advices from Monterey to the effect that notwithstanding published reports to the contrary good order prevails in Saitillo as well as in Monterey and vicinity.

According to reports received to day from the Monterey consular district, general order is being observed with affairs in that section, and there appears to be a better understanding between all Mexican officials.

A telegram received from the department representative at Ciudad, Fortifido Diaz states that the best of order prevails throughout the consular district and that railroad and telegraph communication is open to Monterey and Saitillo.

The convention at Mexico City according to reports received here today, yesterday elected Governor Gutierrez of San Luis Potosi president of the convention, and General Murguia of Coahuila vice president.

General Carranza did not appear personally at yesterday's sessions, but was represented by proxy, the dispatches said.

The constitutionalist agency here announced tonight that Fernando Iglesias Calderon, General Villa's choice for provisional president, would not accept the office.

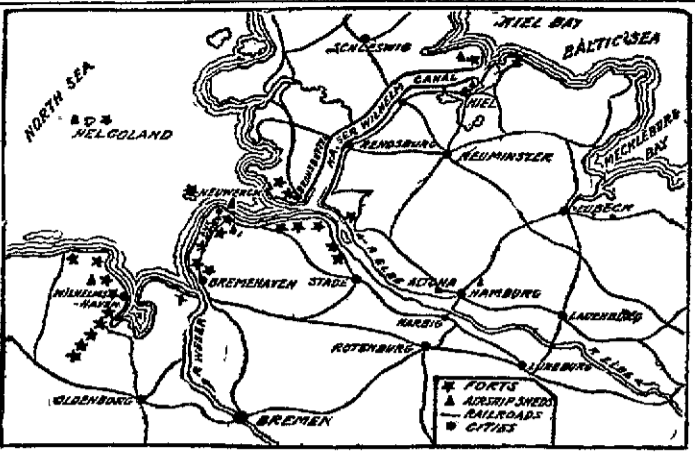

Representing all elements chose him a message to the agency from San Antonio said.

Iglesias Calderon telegraphed Villa today that he would be unable to accept the provisional presidency in the manner in which the division of the north offered it to him because it would be the division of merely one division but if the national convention representing all elements offered it to him he would be glad to accept it to prevent a new recourse to arms.

German Attack Weakening, Declares British Report

Headquarters of the British Forces in France Give Description of Operations Up to September 29.

London, October 3.—The official press bureau has issued a statement from the headquarters of the British expeditionary force under date of September 29, concerning movements of the British force and the French armies in immediate touch with it.

The general situation as viewed on the map remains the same as that described in the last letter, and the task of the army has not changed. It is to maintain itself until there is a general resumption of the offensive.

No ground has been lost. Some has been gained and every counter attack has been repulsed, in certain instances with severe loss to the enemy.

Nevertheless the question of position is only a part of the battle and there has been considerable improvement in the situation in another respect.

Recent offensive efforts of the enemy have been made without cohesion his assaults being delivered by comparatively small bodies acting without co-ordination.

Some of them, indeed, evince clear signs of inferior leadership this bearing out statements made by prisoners of recent capture.

German Fire Decreasing. Further the hostile artillery fire has decreased in volume and deteriorated both in control and direction.

Our troops in the second line at certain points have been ordered to move forward about the village places.

German Aeroplane Taken. (Bulletin by the North Carolina State Board of Health.) A good woman living in the western part of the state suffered and died of tuberculosis.

German Attack Repulsed. The Germans came on in T formation several lines shoulder to shoulder, followed almost immediately by a column in support.

The incident that occurred Sunday, the 27th, serves to illustrate the tactics of fighting that has for the past two weeks been going on intermittently on various parts of our line.

At a certain point in our front our advance trenches are on the north of the Assne not far from a village on a slope of a spur formed by a subsidiary valley.

From far and near the sullen boom of guns echoed along the valley and at intervals in a different direction the sky was dotted with the almost motionless smoke of anti air craft shrapnel.

Suddenly and without warning, for the reports of the distant Howitzers from which they were fired could not be distinguished from other distant reports, three or four heavy shells fell into the village, sending up huge clouds of dust and smoke.

Roar from British Guns. After a few minutes there was a roar from one side of the main line, as our field guns opened, one after another, in a more deliberate fire upon the positions of the enemy.

Again, after short intervals the enemy's gunners repeated with a burst, and then the smoke cleared, and which by now was merged into one solid screen above a considerable number of the trenches and our own guns reply.

Ignoring our guns, the German artillerymen, probably relying on concealment for immunity, were concentrating their efforts in a particularly forceful effort to enfilade our trenches.

GERMANS CLAIM RUSSIAN DEFEAT

Berlin Reports That the Czar Forces Have Lost a Two Days' Battle in Russian Poland.

London, October 4.—(3 54 a m.)—A dispatch from German headquarters says that the Third Siberian army of the Twenty-second Russian army corps have been defeated near Augustow, Russian Poland, after two days' fighting.

A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company from its Amsterdam correspondent reads: "A message from Berlin says that an official telegram from German headquarters states that in the French war theater there is no material change in the situation."

The Asylum's Advantage. (From Judge.) At the orphan asylum the childless Mrs. Hathway, who had selected an infant for adoption, suddenly showed trepidation.

"Will I have to keep the baby, if it doesn't suit my husband?" she asked hesitatingly.

"Of course you won't have to keep it," responded the accommodating matron. "You can bring the kid back and exchange it any time."

A Fine Legacy. (Bulletin by the North Carolina State Board of Health.) A good woman living in the western part of the state suffered and died of tuberculosis.

There is a strong and growing feeling of this kind throughout the state of North Carolina. Some people are going to do even better than those who have done so well.

As a general thing, even after a man has lost everything but remorse, he can find a good woman willing to marry him.

COTTON REPLACING JUTE FOR BAGGING

American Sugar Refining Company Will Use Sacks for Products Where the Wholesalers So Desire.

Advises received by the executive committee of the National Cotton Consuming Association last week from New Orleans, Birmingham, Jacksonville and New York, told of the formation of branches of the Atlanta organization in those cities to push the substitution of cotton for jute in the manufacture of bagging. It was the association's plan to consume of over 1,000,000 bales of this year's cotton.

News was also received from time that the duck mills at that place had received so many orders for cotton bagging that running full time the mills would be kept busy for several months. Advice from mills all over the south gave eloquent testimony to the extent to which to which the plans of the cotton consuming association have been followed up by the users of bagging of all kinds.

T. W. Martin, chairman of the executive committee of the association, received a letter from the Louisville Milling company of Louisville, Ky. stating that they had already under way plans which would result in the total substitution of cotton for jute in their business. The latter instructed him to carry out the policy to stress the importance of this change.

Send Wheat in Cotton Bins.
A letter from the Duplin mills of Richmond, Va. gives the information that they are shipping 2,000 bushels of wheat in cotton burlap of jute as heretofore to stimulate the consumption of the cotton burlap to help southern planters. It is noted that the yards of 7 ounce cotton in an acre sales, which give employment to several southern cotton mills for many weeks. Atlanta representatives of all the fertilizer concerns doing business in the south has communicated with the head offices of their various companies, urging upon them the substitution of cotton for the jute bagging now generally used. The response to these letters indicates not only that the companies will do this in future, but that many of them have already laid plans in that direction.

Recent Charles A. Wickesham of the Atlanta and West Point railroad has as chairman of the General Managers Association of the Southeast, sent a letter to each member of that organization asking full co-operation with the National Cotton Consuming Association.

The movement to remove as much cotton as possible from the market is being advanced by a number of plans both for purifying cotton and the use of cotton in various lines of manufacture were made.

Amalgam in Sugar Refining Company.
The American Sugar Refining company of New Orleans announced on Saturday that it will use cotton sacks for the shipment of its products. It is stated that the jute or wholer will still be used for the purpose of bagging instead of jute or burlap.

The Porter company points out that the American Sugar Refining company's 10-ounce plant has a capacity of 12,000 barrels daily, which is equivalent to 1,000,000 sacks of 100 pounds each.

Specific Cotton Sacks.
It is pointed out that if the jobber will specify when ordering sacks it would mean an extra consumption of a good many of the issued bales of cotton to supply the stock of one order of the American Sugar Refining company.

In relation to the Louisiana plant, this company, the general manager in the last week's annual capacity is not a larger than that of the Louisiana plant.

It is pointed out that if the jobber will specify when ordering sacks it would mean an extra consumption of a good many of the issued bales of cotton to supply the stock of one order of the American Sugar Refining company.

Another concern which has announced that it will use cotton instead of jute for its bagging is the Corn Products Refining company of New York. This issue should result in the substitution of 17,000,000 bales of cotton per year.

Boston, October 3.—Massachusetts Democrats in convention at Faneuil hall today adopted a platform which endorsed the national administration in the following terms:

It (the party) has given the country a president whose interfering devotion to the rights of mankind has kept our government from foreign entanglements during the greatest war since the dawn of civilization. It has placed taxes on the incomes of those who can best afford to pay them, and removed them from the necessities of life. It has reformed the currency, making impossible the cornering of credit.

ALMOST BALD WITH ECZEMA.
Red and Inflamed, Hair Coming Out by Handfuls. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Pimples Dried Up. Hair Thick and Glossy.

R. F. D. No. 2, Johnson City, Tenn.—"Some time ago my head became covered with small sores which they said was eczema. They were red and inflamed and when I would comb my head they would break and run a yellowish matter. My hair was coming out by handfuls until I was getting almost bald. My hair was so dead and dry it seemed as if it would break out."

Several other remedies without getting any help I got a cake of Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment and used them. In a short time from when I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment the pimples dried up and my hair stopped falling out and is thick and glossy again. I am cured." (Signed) J. W. Fisher, Jan. 1, 1914.

An Epoch for Success Builders

Times of stress in business bring out the best in the individual and the organization.

During the panic days of 1907 there were thousands to go down under pressure, while those who had the fortitude to meet conditions as they found them made rapid strides along the road to success.

There is no panic today. The retail merchants of Atlanta estimate an increase in business of September this year over September of last year.

In our own business we see more evidence of new advertisers now than we did at this time last year. True, the enquirer of today is not as ambitious as he was a year ago, but there are more of them.

Times are not half so "hard" as the professional "croaker" would have you believe. The time to build business is when competition is lax in effort. Folks will go on wearing clothes, eating food and buying pleasure just so long as American optimism prevails.

While the horrors of the European situation have a tendency to depress business the condition must eventually come to an end and when it does the Advertiser who has "steered in the middle of the road" will have business he never could have captured under so called "normal conditions." The "quitters" will be the losers.

We practice this preachment by continuing our advertising as usual.

SENATOR SWEAT FAVORS EXTENSION OF W. & A.

South Georgian Thinks That Immediate Action Is Advisable.

Waycross, Ga., October 3.—(Special) It is the opinion of Senator J. L. Sweat of the Fifth district that in the event Governor Johnson calls a special session of the state legislature some action should be taken to protect the Western and Atlantic railroad against being paralleled by the line proposed from Columbus to Atlanta by the Louisville and Nashville.

That such an extension could be built by the state within a short time is the belief of Senator Sweat. He feels that by the state securing the southern line from Atlanta to Fort Valley and the Atlantic Waycross and Northern line from St. Marys to Fort Valley and a part of it built and using a portion of the able bodied convicts in the state the remaining link 175 miles could be readily constructed.

In addition to securing and developing the splendid deep water port facilities at St. Marys Senator Sweat states that the line could be extended on to Jacksonville a distance of thirty two miles giving the state magnificent trunk line that would extend from Chattanooga to Jacksonville, enabling the state forever to dictate freight and passenger rates and port charges. Such a property could never be bottled up.

Prohibit Parallel Lines. Discussing the revenue from such a trunk line Senator Sweat said:

Not only would the immense income from the road be available to the public schools but it would be ample sufficient to support all the public institutions of the state thereby saving the people from the burdens of taxation. Self protection would be justly theirs if we could not prohibit the states from building further parallels.

Other Legislation. The revenue for the extra session would be commensurate to the progress to be made in the state. Senator Sweat said that the revenue would be ample to meet the needs of the state. He also mentioned the need for a new currency law and the need for a new title system.

Relief for Catarrh Sufferers Now FREE

You Can Now Treat This Trouble in Your Own Home and Get Relief at Once.

How the Remedy for Catarrh Was Discovered. THIS terrible disease has raged unchecked for years simply because symptoms have been treated while the cause of the trouble has been left to circulate in the blood, and bring the disease back as fast as local treatments could relieve it.

Careful experiments and investigations have shown that as the troubles were expelled from the nose and throat, the real cause of the disease was overlooked and in a short time the Catarrh would return stronger than ever.

Removes the Cause and Immediately Gives Relief to the Nose and Throat.

Recollections of Senator Penn says that after trying many other treatments he used this new method and his nose is clear and his throat is free and he is no longer bothered by the disease any more. The New Combined Treatment is worth its weight in gold.

Send the Test Treatment FREE. C. E. GAUSS, 6118 Main Street, Marshall, Mich. If your New Combined Treatment will relieve your Catarrh and bring you health and good spirits again I am willing to be shown so without cost or obligation.

An Opportunity to Win a Box or 25 Pairs of Tickets To "Today" at the Atlanta Theater

Monday and Tuesday Evening and Matinee

HOW TO SECURE TICKETS

Each advertisement on this page, as well as in this and the opposite corner, contains a portion of a thrilling scene from the fourth act of "Today," at the Atlanta Theater, Monday and Tuesday evenings and Tuesday matinee. Clip the portions of the picture as shown on this page, and paste the picture together, mailing same to the Contest Editor of The Constitution. As the replies are received they will be numbered, and to the person sending in the first correct answer a box to the Monday evening performance of "Today" will be given. To the next twenty-five persons sending in a correct answer a pair of tickets will be given.

To hear them tell it you'd think that every Tailor and Haberdasher in Atlanta had a double half-hitch on fabrics and styles for Fall Fourteen. In my search for nobby fabrics I have not devastated Europe nor have I put New York Tailors out of business. But I did get my share of the good things in Cloth, Leather, Silk and things before the supply was shut off from the other side. That's honest. Needless to say, the object of this little announcement is to induce your desire for some of the things I have to sell—Haberdashery, Hats, Footwear, Tailored Clothes, that are a constant joy. Glad to have you for one of my customers.

THE STORY OF "TODAY"

One of the chief problems of every-day life in the cities and in many small communities is how to induce women to dress according to their incomes. In the case of misguided Lily Wagner, in the powerful drama, "Today," her husband killed her to cure her of the craze that had soiled her life, but seeing "Today" and thinking about it will suggest a less dramatic cure. The sight of a handsome gown mounted to the brain of Lily Wagner, and befuddled it as the fumes of wine befuddle the drunkard. Beginning as a pretty girl with an average interest in dainty apparel, the liking grew into an obsession. It became a monster that destroyed her. The cure? Yes, "Today" is a constructive play and offers a remedy. Lily is shown as idle, as allowing her mother-in-law—a patient, lovable mother-in-law, by the way—to do all the work of their little household, while she sits "drinking of heaven knows what." There is the remedy. Lily might have learned to shop intelligently, and to make her own clothes, or most of them. So she might have filled her closets with frocks that were pretty and suitable, and by such simple means the awful tragedy of her life would have been averted. "Today" is a moral play. That play is a moral one which shows the sinner suffering the penalty of his sin. Lily Wagner died for her love of clothes.

South Carolina Beaten By Tech On Muddy Field

Jackets Make Three Touchdowns and Two Goals. Many Subs. Are Used. 20 to 0.

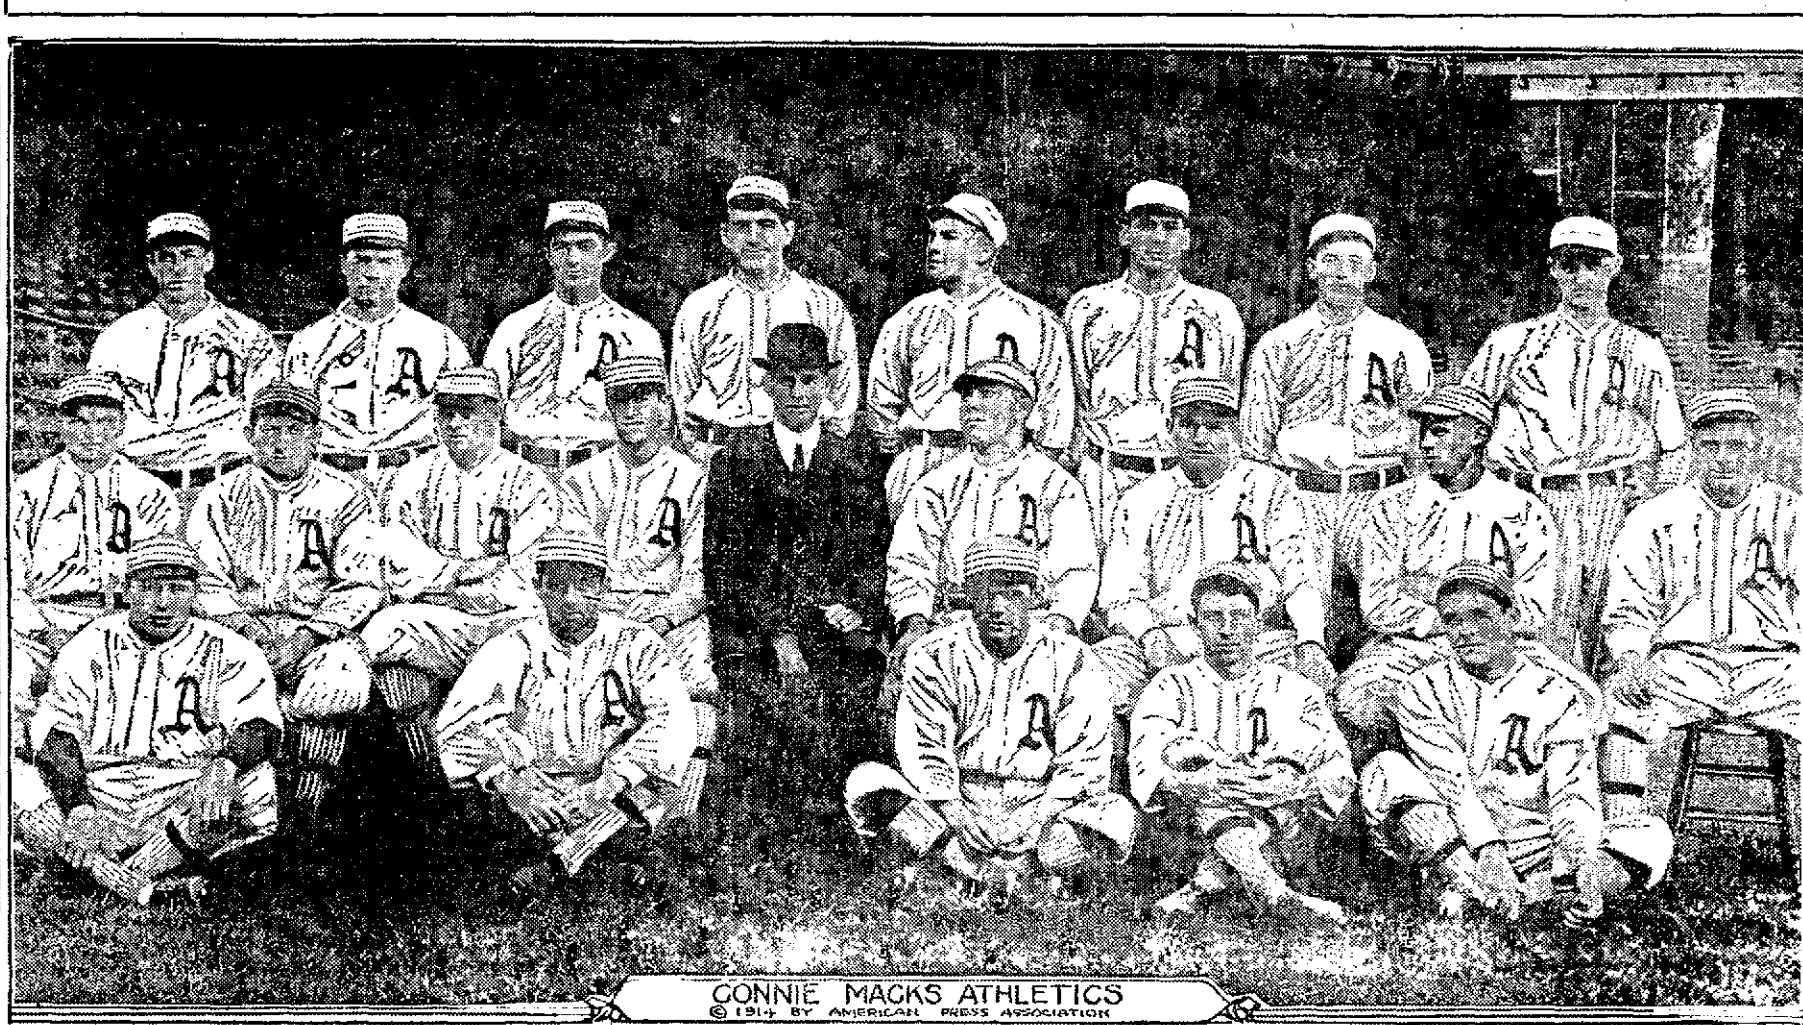

By Dick Jemison. The Tech Jackets opened their football season of 1914 by defeating the University of South Carolina at Gent field, Saturday afternoon, 24 to 0. Despite the inclement weather that made speedy work impossible, the jackets showed good form on their end runs and an ability to keep their feet for some time after hammering the line.

Losses fumbling marked the work of both teams but usually the case at the first of the first game of the season. A splendid opening bill for one of the most successful football seasons that Atlanta fans have ever had the pleasure of witnessing.

Carolina was outclassed by the Jackets. The line of the Carolina team did not make first down. But they were fierce and deadly tacklers, resulting in many hard and dangerous plays that the Jackets.

Collins and Evers Picked As Most Valuable Players; Constitution Predicted It

Chicago, October 3.—Eddie Collins, of the Philadelphia Athletics, and John Evers, of the Boston Nationals, today were declared winners of the 1914 trophy presented by a Detroit manufacturer to the players whose services were the most valuable to their respective clubs.

Chicago, October 3.—Walter Maranville, of Boston, ran Evers a close race for the National league prize and the result was not known until the last vote was counted.

Leaders in the National league were: Boston, 30; Maranville, Boston, 44; James, Boston, 33; Burns, New York, 31; Jack Miller, St. Louis, 18; Tuerou, New York, 15; Roidolph, Boston, 14; Sherwood Magee, Philadelphia, 11; Wheat, Brooklyn, 10.

Since the inception of baseball championships in 1884, twenty-two series have been played. Two of these resulted in ties which were not played off. In all, 140 games have been played, five of them ties. The winning teams in all of the series combined have laded 97 of the games and the losers 38.

RED AND BLACK PLAYED POORLY

Only Defeats the Citadel Eleven 13 to 0—Gus York Has the Misfortune to Break His Arm.

Athens, Ga., October 3.—(Special.)—Georgia defeated the Citadel here this afternoon by the score of 13 to 0. The showing of the Red and Black eleven was a disappointment. The game was played in a drizzling rain on a soggy field.

The Georgia line appeared woefully weak with the exception of Henderson, who played a jam-up game from start to finish. Tom Thrash proved the best ground-gainer for the locals. Time after time he was shifted to fullback.

Pitching may decide the world's series this year. In its pitching staff will be Boston's greatest hope. If Rudolph, James and Tyler can silence the bats of the National league team, the series is bound to be close.

On the defensive, the Boston team is somewhat ragged. The outfield, which has been shifted and shifted above and below, is a mediocre one. Connolly is the only player who stands above the ordinary.

STUDEBAKER SENDS HELP TO THE SOUTH

Orders Big Expenditure for Cotton—Buys Only From Growers.

South Bend, Ind., October 3.—In a novel and thoroughly typical American way, the Studebaker corporation, of South Bend and Detroit, has entered the cotton market on a large scale, buying orders having been forwarded to the managers of its branches in Atlanta, Dallas and St. Louis, through which center it handled the distribution throughout the south of the firm's automobiles and horse-drawn vehicles.

The first order is for the purchase of 500 bales. This cotton will be bought at 10 cents a pound.

President F. S. Fish outlined the Studebaker plan in a brief interview.

"We are buying this cotton," he said, "because of our belief that, in the cotton which we buy, we own a definite duty to the southern planters who are suffering so distressingly as the result of the European war. We are making this expenditure in a way which will enable us to place every cent of it with the southern farmer—the producer. Not one bale will be bought through speculators or middlemen."

"We have abundant confidence in the south and in the future of its great staple. Far more influential in determining our present course was, however, our own feeling of obligation to the southern planter, a virtually all of whom are our customers and many of whom have bought Studebaker goods for two decades or more."

"Our investment in cotton will be virtually a loan in which we assume the entire risk. We are able to eventually dispose of our cotton at an advanced price, we will turn over the ultimate profit to the growers from whom we bought it."

"Our investment is contingent on no purchase of our goods, and has no strings whatever attached to it. We also aim to make the distribution of our investments as broad as possible in the undertaking we are working in close touch with our vehicle and automobile dealers, thus availing ourselves of an advisory council which will visually every cotton-growing county in the southern states."

The details of the Studebaker plan are in charge of Assistant Sales Manager Thelen, of the vehicle division here.

MAXWELL CORPORATION PURCHASES 2,000 BALES

Another Instance of Spirit of Co-operation by Walter E. Flanders.

Purchase of approximately 2,000 bales of distress cotton by the Maxwell Motor Corporation is but another instance of co-operation with the dealer and assistance given when it is needed, by Walter E. Flanders and his associates.

The Maxwell company in the south, just returned from the Detroit factories, points to the fact that this move is a furtherance of the policy of Walter Flanders.

Maxwell is ever striving to further the interests of his brothers in the spirit that has always existed between factory dealer and owner, says Flanders.

"There are no strings tied to the plan of the Maxwell company in its purchase. Mr. Flanders simply sent wires out to every Maxwell dealer in the south to buy 500 bales of distress cotton at 10 cents per pound and charge to their accounts."

"It is, indeed, commendable of the Maxwell company, as well as numerous other interests, that they have made to condemn the grasping speculator. There have been many men with advantage of the peculiar condition in the south and buy cotton at a low figure, holding it for a 50 or 60 cent advance."

The Maxwell company begs every planter to be overanxious to dispose of his supply. In this manner the greedy speculator is eliminated.

The farmer, owner and dealer will believe, as we of the Maxwell company do, and govern his sales along with the farmer, that a business plan will emerge from the war dilemma victorious.

"The American cotton mills consume about 40 per cent of the south's output, and these mills are now working night and day to supply the world with cotton. It is shown by the business interests of the country-at-large, the remaining cotton will remain a short time, be retired."

The Maxwell company is shouting its protest at every cotton dealer and citizen to take up this little cry, charge the speculator and do his best to conquer the hosts of the doubting. We must prove that the business of this country is not to be destroyed by a European conflict."

LOOKS FOR BUSINESS IN EUROPE THIS YEAR

John L. Poole, export manager of the Hupp Motor Car company, with headquarters at Paris, France, will return to Europe soon for the purpose of looking into Hupp's business.

Mr. Poole, speaking about his proposed return abroad, is inclined to believe that the European market for American automobile manufacturers in Europe this fall. He has based this opinion on personal investigation and from various interviews he has had recently with men who have returned to the United States from the very heart of the war crisis.

"Of course I understand," said Mr. Poole, "that the European market is practically demoralized business conditions in the belligerent countries. But I really feel that in order to know the exact state of affairs, it is necessary for me to make a first-hand investigation of business conditions, and for this season I am going to Europe."

"Count de Peccoral, our distributor at home, has just arrived at Detroit and placed an order for 100 Hupps. This certainly looks good to me, and the count states that while generally the war in Europe will have a tendency to depress business for a while, he will only temporarily and subtly as the conflict is over, or is confined to certain limits."

"The reports I have been reading recently, in reference to the Russian army and the fact that they have a number of American prisoners taken at the fortress of St. Peter and Paul in Petrograd, calls to my mind an instance that I have recently while here in Detroit."

"While there, in company with the Hupp distributor, I made a tour of the river Neva, and was built by Peter the Great in 1703. The old fortress, which was once a stronghold of the Russian army, is now used as a prison for political spies and enemies of the government. One of the first political prisoners, as the story goes, was Peter Alexievich, and the various descriptions that I received of his death are too horrifying to relate. It has been used since the time of Peter as the burial place for the royal family victims."

HENDEE COMPANY TRAVELING MEN SEE 1915 MODELS

The Hendee Manufacturing company, makers of Indian motorcycles, has called in the Atlanta branch of Springfield, Mass., its entire staff of traveling men to inspect the 1915 models and prepare for the sales campaign which will be launched from the Atlanta branch at 457 Peachtree street.

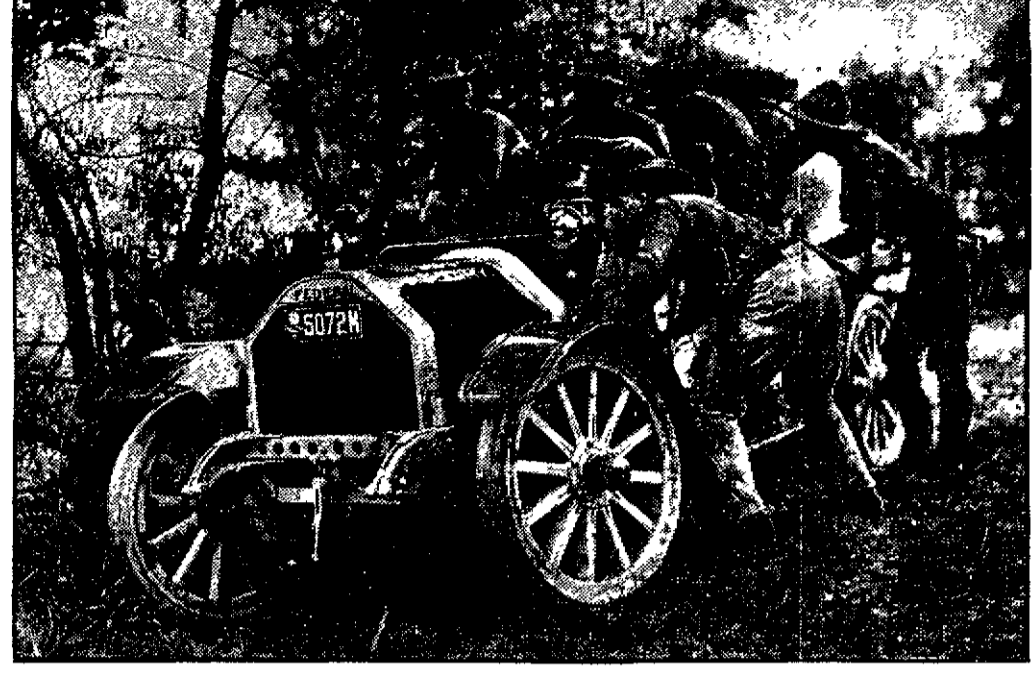

T. C. Butler, Jr., who covers the eastern and southern territory, and the southern Atlantic representative, left on the 1st for a two weeks' stay.

Although the war has retarded development regarding the new models of the Indian line, the company has not set aside any announcement of their line at the present time. He says that the new features will be as interesting and far-reaching in effect as those of previous year, when the Indian introduced the spring frame foot boards, front brake and electric equipment to the motorcycle field.

In spite of the fact that no announcement has been made, he solicited, the Atlanta branch has already booked a large number of orders both in the retail department and in the agency districts. The prospects for a large fall season's business are unusually bright.

Rates on Cotton Suspended. Washington, October 2.—Proposed increases in the freight rates on cotton from foreign ports to this country have been suspended today by the interstate commerce commission until February 2, 1915.

at each of the fields where the games are played, about one hundred wires are strung out from the press box at each park and these reach out and multiply into innumerable relay wires. It is estimated that at least 10,000 telegraph operators send, receive and relay reports of the games.

In most of the larger cities special editions are run off by the evening papers every few minutes, with a complete story and box score of the game several minutes after the game is over.

It is no unusual thing for a live newspaper to have an edition on the street with every play and a complete box score less than five minutes after the last man is put out.

To do this, however, it is necessary to have a competent staff to handle the returns and in the office, composing room and press room force, that are accustomed to such rapid work.

Small Town Systems. In the smaller towns and cities the means of obtaining first-hand information before the game is over, of course, more limited. In some places the only news obtainable is a telegram after the game from the nearest telegraph office, containing the result and the pitcher. The interest here, however, is no less than where the facilities for receiving information are better.

In addition to the newspapers and their bulletin boards, electric scoreboards and other methods of spreading the news, nearly every theater in cities of 10,000 population or over is supplied with a running description of the game, which is either flashed upon a screen or read between the acts.

That the interest in the series is increasing yearly is shown by the attendance and receipts in the last few years. Aside from these official figures, there is no way of telling the pulse of the public. The non-spectator who follows the big games are a legion, but whether their tribe is increasing or decreasing with the passing years can only be conjectured. A good guess would be that it is on the increase, as is the high cost of living and at the same rate of speed.

How Fans Who Stay at Home Learn Details of Big Series

In point of popularity baseball is without a doubt king of sports in this country. It probably has more devoted fans than any other sport, and the other sports combined. It is also the leader among national sports, for no other country can show any that compares with it.

However, great as is the interest in baseball generally, it is as nothing compared to the concern of the millions of people in the annual series for the world's championship. Of the 50,000,000 population of the United States, it is safe to say that fully 50,000,000 watch this series closely each year. The tremendous interest in the world's series is unparalleled. Unfortunately, only 30,000 or 40,000 of these 50,000,000 are able to see games as they are played. How the other 47,000,000 are supplied with the news of the struggle forms an interesting sidelight.

Telegraph Companies Busy. Each year previous to the opening of the series, the telegraph companies find it necessary to prepare for a great increase in business. They carry the news in detailed or bulletined form into every nook and corner of the United States, Cuba and other countries. Wireless is also brought into play in flashing the results to different parts of the world.

LONG HARD TEST

With honors seated under the personal direction of Chief of Police Glendon W. H. Hasley, of the Williamstown, Frank Zerbie, of Glidden path-racing and international fame, and Ray Barnett, of the latter's fame, were sent away from Chicago at noon Wednesday, September 28, headed for the Atlantic coast on a sealed banner of liability test more strenuous than any other drivers in this country's type of automobile anywhere in the world.

Messrs. Hasley, Zerbie and Barnett will essay driving this latest Mitchell masterpiece of Engineer John W. Bates, a 24-hp. light car building the route days, traversing a total of 7,500 miles of highways as found between Chicago and the Atlantic coast.

Messrs. Hasley, Zerbie and Barnett set the record in the recent Pittsburgh non-motor test in a Mitchell special six, when they drove 2,583 miles in 120 hours without a stop of the motor.

The Mitchell light car building in the opinion of many engineers who have seen this latest creation of Engineer John W. Bates of the Mitchell-Lewis Motor company, and we propose giving this test of tests, feeling confident that the honor rest will be broken when the car finishes its run at Pittsburgh during the Pittsburgh automobile show.

HINTS FOR REPAIRMEN FROM GOODYEAR BOOK

These hints for repairmen are taken from "No-Stitch New," the publication for dealers issued by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company, Akron, Ohio.

"When dark-curing cement is used in repairing white cracks, dark lines and marks are left that will spoil the appearance of the most workman-like job. Realizing this, we have for some time past been using a white cementing cement in our own repair department, and with such excellent results that we are adding it to our regular line of repair material."

"Repairmen often turn away trade in motorcycle tires because they suppose they can't repair motorcycle tires without a complete equipment of sectional molds. This is not necessary; cement two or three piles of light fabric on the inside, flatten the casing out and cure repairs on the tube plate."

"Handbags may be used instead of air bags in curing tread cuts. Internal pressure only is needed, and is obtained in such repairs. For each sectional mold size one sandbag and one steel bar is used. The sandbags should be of heavy canvas, shaped like a common sash bag, and filled with cement two or three piles of light fabric on the inside, flatten the casing out and cure repairs on the tube plate."

"The sandbag is placed within the tread, the steel bar is placed over the tread. The sandbag is placed against the center of the bar. This spreads out the sandbag and supplies the necessary pressure against the tread. It is a good plan to drill a hole or slot in the bar, so that the clamp screw can get a grip."

CLOSED BODY TYPES FOR CHANDLER LINE

Announcement has been made by officials of the Chandler Motor Car company, Cleveland, of the addition of four new closed body types to the Chandler line for 1915.

The most remarkable feature of the new Chandler closed cars is their unusually light weight. Since last year, the Chandler engineers have directed their energies toward reducing the weight of the complete car, and this policy has been adhered to in the latest models. As an instance, the car with passenger limousine, with complete equipment and every luxurious feature, weighs less than 2,000 pounds. Both the coupe and sedan models weigh less than the limousine, and the new cabriolet is well under 1,000 pounds.

Five persons can be accommodated with comfort in the closed compartments of the limousine, with room for the driver and passenger in front. A new type of folding seat in the rear can be arranged so that the occupants face either the front or rear. These seats fold down out of the way when not in use, and the windows are adjustable and the windows of the rear compartment are adjusted by patent regulators (not packed with linings). The steel bar should be of one inch section about 1 foot long and curved so it will fit into the mold.

The new Chandler sedan will rank with the handsomest of the 1914 line of limousine, the rear seat is 47 inches long, and is adjustable. The front seat next to the driver folds out of position when not in use, giving access to any height or desired position.

The Cabriolet is fashioned after the style of all-year-round car that has become the favorite first started many years ago in universal use abroad. The leather top may be folded down in such a manner as to give the car the appearance of a graceful roadster model, without emphasizing its adaptability for winter use. It is only necessary to open the front door, and the car becomes a completely enclosed cabriolet. The door is opened so that the occupants face rearward and has a corner seat for the third passenger, facing the rear.

The Coupe, Limousine and Sedan are upholstered in Bedford cord and imported lace, with the usual equipment of curtains, interior electric lights and other conveniences. All models are interchangeable on the standard Chandler six-cylinder chassis.

SPLITDORF COMPANY HAS PLENTY OF STOCK

"The devastating European war has undoubtedly upset the gear of general business and will, moreover, create chaos in many lines, but the Splitdorf electrical company is not in this country and is not affected by it."

This statement was made by C. W. Curtiss, general manager of the Splitdorf factory at Newark, N. J., recently, in response to a query as to how the conflict of warring nations would affect the business of his company.

"Manufacturers of electrical appliances, motorcycles, motorboats, farm tractors, etc., need have no hesitancy in calling upon the Splitdorf company for their ignition needs," declared Mr. Curtiss. "In raw material, as well as in finished goods, the Splitdorf company has stock on hand and manufacturing facilities to meet every demand, for quantities up to 100,000 of any quantity and requirement."

"All the units of our tremendous output of magnetos, for instance, are made in America, and, with the raw material on hand and procurable here, the foreign situation has no bearing upon our manufacturing possibilities, as we are not dependent upon anything coming from abroad to affect our deliveries."

American manufacturers are going slow about their output of automobiles, motorcycles, etc., but it is reassuring to them to know that the splendidly fore-stocked preparedness of the Splitdorf company precludes the possibility of their being held up in deliveries through any scarcity of ignition devices."

ing years can only be conjectured. A good guess would be that it is on the increase, as is the high cost of living and at the same rate of speed.

Every manufacturing plant operated on business lines, carrying insurance and borrowing money, needs an appraisal as much as it needs insurance.

An Appraisal Saves Insurance. The average $100,000 manufacturing plant pays insurance on about 25 per cent of non-insurable property.

An Appraisal Is a Basis for Loans. With an established appraisal in hand banks will lend more and "easier" money to a manufacturing plant than without this evidence of true worth.

G. N. & I. COLLEGE NEWS.

The first number of the yearbook course was given in the auditorium on Saturday evening of last week, at which Miss Virginia Caverton, Miss Helen Beatty, soprano, and Miss Mary Bailey, violinist, entertained the large group of students in the hall.

The committee having charge of the yearbook attractions for this year has arranged several numbers of interest and will have an entertainment every week or two.

The sophomore class of this year is of about the same size as that of last year, and is in the neighborhood of two hundred members. They are holding all meetings to discuss matters that may come up in the class, thus reducing the regular organization to a minimum.

The President, Ruth Parks, Millersville, vice president, Marion Miller, La Bort, secretary, Helen McLean, Fulton and treasurer, Pearl Shalkford, Lexington.

Another visitor to chapel last week was Mrs. McGhee, of Atlanta, who was here to attend the Baldwin county Sunday school convention. Mrs. McGhee made a short talk, which was much appreciated.

The Sunday which by reason of the proclamation issued by President Wilson, will be known as "Peace Sunday," will be specially observed by our students. The "Peace Hymn," published in the Constitution of last Monday, has been taught to all the students by Miss Tucker, director of music, and was used as a part of the service at such of the churches here as the young ladies singing alone.

The mission study classes have been divided and arranged so that each student can join any one she wishes. That is arranged for her class. Ten subjects have been selected and each has a leader. So far these are the subjects and their respective leaders: "South African Problems" (the Rev. The Policy That Popularized Allen's

THIS establishment has anticipated all the requirements of the new season—for everyday wear as well as for the various functions which will occur with the resumption of social activities.

And while the subject of clothes is uppermost in our minds, let us observe that there is a marked distinction, drawn by clever women today, between dressing merely "in style" and being smartly gowned.

The woman who realizes this selects her wardrobe in the shop which also makes this distinction.

This is a privilege almost every woman would exercise if she knew that she could do so and keep within the limits of a modest expenditure for clothes.

The Allen Ready-to-Wear offers this double advantage. The latest developments of the reigning fashion, tempered by good taste, at prices which are the antithesis of extravagance.

This is the policy that made this the popular shopping ground for Atlanta women.

The Hair Easily Made Beautiful and Attractive
Beautiful hair, thick, fluffy, lustrous, is absolutely free from dandruff. It is not so much a gift of nature as a matter of care and proper nourishment. Hair is like a plant—it will not grow healthy and beautiful unless it has attention and proper nutrition.

Super-Bristan Sage is a distinctly perfumed liquid that is easily applied, tones up and invigorates the hair roots and furnishes the necessary nourishment to not only save and beautify the hair, but also stimulate it to grow long, heavy, soft, shiny and radiant with life.

When used frequently and well rubbed into the scalp, it will surely work wonders. Just one application stops itching head, removes dandruff and cleanses the hair of all dirt and excess oil.

Super-Bristan Sage which can be obtained from Jacobs' 48 stores, or at any drug or toilet counter, never disappoints. It is not only necessary for any woman to be beautiful, but because of this, streaky, faded, lifeless or unmanageable hair is a pretty hair more than anything else, helps every woman to retain her charm and youthful appearance.

Marriage of Miss Black And Mr. Lamar C. Rucker

The marriage of Miss Nita Black and Mr. Lamar C. Rucker, of Athens, Ga., was a brilliant event of last night, solemnized at All Saints' Episcopal church. A large congregation witnessed the ceremony, which took place at 6:30 o'clock and afterwards a small reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Nellie Peters Black.

Miss Louise Black was her sister's maid of honor. Mr. Jephtha Rucker, of Athens, was best man and Dr. Michael Hoke, of Athens, was officiating. William Edwin, of Athens, Charles Clarke, Jr., James Young Swift, of Liberton, and Arthur Clarke were ushers.

The choir, singing "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden," preceded the bridal party into the church, the wedding march then announcing the coming of the bride. She entered with her brother, Mr. Ralph Black, of Asheville, N. C., and was given in marriage by her mother.

Her brother, Rev. R. M. W. Black, of Columbia, Tenn., officiated at the betrothal ceremony outside the chancel rail, and Rev. W. W. Memminger, pastor of the church, read the marriage service, the choir singing the marriage hymn, "O Perfect Love." The benediction was pronounced by Bishop Nelson.

Church Decorations. Beautiful decoration was an appropriate incident. Palms were massed in the chancel, and the chancel rail was made a hedge of Easter lilies. Palms were banked behind the altar, and the space above and around it was filled with an arch of lights, three seven-branch candelabras outlined in the midst of many single candles. The stained glass windows were relieved against electric lights behind them.

The Woman's Study Club. The Woman's Study Club, which meets at the Carnegie library the first and third Thursdays, 3:30 p. m., held a very interesting program at its last meeting. At the Reception. An artistic decoration in palms with autumn foliage and flowers, was the setting for a happy hospitality. Palms were banked in the hall, palms, with yellow dahlias, decorated the drawing room, and garden roses, princess feather and gay fall blooms were used throughout the reception floor. An orchestra played appropriate selections, and punch was served by Miss Fredericka Wade, Miss Jane Peters and Miss Mary Cohen.
The "bride's book," which was signed by all the guests, was a gift from the "Maid of Honor" club, the kindergarten and the Holy Innocents Mission society, of which system Mrs. Black was founder and the bride a teacher while many other girls were similarly suggestive of the many beautiful philanthropies in which Mrs. Rucker has assisted her mother, one of the most prominent and valiant workers in religious and humanitarian achievement in the state.
The bride's family represents also the most distinguished and constructive citizens in Atlanta, beginning with Henry Dale and the whole family are conspicuous in achievement whenever their interests call them. She is a granddaughter of the late Richard Peters, and a niece of Richard Peters, of Philadelphia. Her own character and charm would win the social prominence to which she is entitled, and she has the affection of her associates, both in her social and more serious activities.

Advertisement for Woodbury's Facial Soap. A skin you love to touch. Why it is so rare. A skin you love to touch is rarely found because so few people understand the skin and its needs. Begin now to take your skin seriously. You can make it what you would love to have it by using the following treatment regularly. Make this treatment a daily habit. Just before retiring, work up a warm water lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the skin gently until the skin is softened, the pores opened and the face feels fresh and clean. Rinse in cooler water, then apply cold water—the colder the better—for a full minute. Whenever possible, rub your face for a few minutes with a piece of ice. Always dry the skin thoroughly. Use this treatment persistently for ten days or two weeks and your skin will show a marked improvement. Use Woodbury's regularly thereafter, and before long your skin will take on that freckle-free, that greater freshness and clearness of "a skin you love to touch."

HARVEST DAY, MONDAY, OCTOBER FIFTH

A Unique Display of Merchandise and the Fruits of the Land

Today is PEACE DAY by proclamation of the President of the United States. It is fitting and proper that we set aside tomorrow as HARVEST DAY, and the whole week for the continuance of a display unique in local storekeeping.

The direct significance of PEACE DAY is one of prayerful interest in the warring nations of Europe.

But it has another meaning, and we propose to turn our store into a picture-allegory of it.

America stands big and alone, in amity with the world, and while nature smiles our fields are ripening, our men are left at home these HARVEST DAYS to reap the fruits of the seed of industry that the fecund earth gives back abundantly.

The Scene the Store Will Present Tomorrow Morning and All the Week Typifies the Richness of the Land, the Richness and Variety of Our Stocks of Seasonable Merchandise

* We are anxious for you to see the store as it will be tomorrow. It is a harmonious background, a fitting setting for the merchandise we have gathered. Nothing but a sympathetic and active response to the needs of the community could have effected the assemblage.

It was hard, very, very hard at times, to get merchandise that measured up to the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. standard. But our methods of storekeeping see no merit in giving blanket orders for vast quantities. Mere volume is not a virtue.

Interest was centered in choosing the rare, the beautiful, the new things that make their appeal to individual good taste. We searched until we found them.

So the store is filled with SELECTED merchandise, the kind we are proud to own, proud to place before a discriminating and knowing Atlanta public.

These are the Harvest Days.

We present the fruits of our labors. Some are rare exotics; some are sturdy staples; all are worthy.

Garner as you will, WHERE you will, the store is in tempting and ripened fullness; but—

Among the Notable Successes We Have Scored This Season Must Be Recorded the Assembling of Such Smart Suits and Dresses, Exclusive Millinery and Artistic Shoes

The Suits and Dresses

The scope and variety of the styles, their individual charm, must impress all who spend a half an hour in the Ready-to-Wear Section. They were chosen with the discriminating taste that distinguishes between the true and the pretentious. Hundreds of suits and hundreds of dresses are different in hundreds of ways, but all expressing right, approved fashions.

Yours is the pleasant task of choosing from the many the one you like best.

The Shoes

A new store. New in every sense of the word, the only one of its kind in the world. And the shoes—made especially for us, completely to meet the requirements of a city of discriminating women.

Turkey Dinner in the Tea Room

The Tea Room has prepared to serve a special Harvest Day Dinner.

The Millinery

The Millinery Section is in a unique position to serve better than ever this season. Our Paris models and Paris trimmings were selected just in time to warrant their safe arrival in America. So the little shop of Estelle Mershon, 20 E. 46th St., New York, and our own workrooms have had every advantage in evolving exquisite copies of and adaptations from these models.

You shall see how well they have succeeded.

By Isma Dooly

Even in the gay whirl where people meet on pleasure bent, the shadow of war finds its place, and the most frivolously inclined turn not a deaf ear to the sad stories that come of the sufferings endured by the women on the other side.

To realize even partially the tragedy of war to the women of the old world one has but to contemplate the grief of the one individual and measure that a hundred thousand times. Then and there comes an idea of what the women of England, Germany, Austria, Belgium, France and Russia are suffering.

Look at the one mother of one son seen weeping over the body of one son; think of the dependent widow, standing in the cold rain, for the last time on the still cold face of a faithful husband, think of the young woman just on the threshold of life who sees her lover taken by the grim reaper as she anticipates the note of wedding bells. Any one of these single cases in its influence over the sympathies of those near it can produce an atmosphere from which an entire community can feel

ATMOSPHERE OF ALL EUROPEAN COUNTRIES.

What, then, the force, must be the atmosphere of every community of every country of Europe where the war-raged ravages, and where the sons and husbands and lovers of women are being ruthlessly butchered by the hundreds and thousands.

Not even can the last words be brought home, not even can the precious bodies be consigned to the plot where nations bury their heroes or families bury their dead. No, this war is so far out-crying in horror that or any previous ones for centuries, that the dead are being desecrated, and every law of war ethics and every standard of humanity are being disregarded.

Prince and pauper, the general and the private, the aristocrat and commoner, are being hewn down together, and the very democracy of the situation is one of its horrors. Not only the nations, but races of people are being threatened in the present disaster, and woman—the mother—is taken from the breast and her guard at the cradle to gather the crops, take up the man's manual labor of the streets. Her sacred calling is halted, she must be the father, mother, protector, worker, all in one, and as men are dying faster than the second hand strikes, racial progress is meeting the greatest blow in old-world civilization.

Tears come when one gazes on the pathetic little face of the 9-year-old princess of Belgium as she is luxuriously guarded in mother England, her tiny little brothers by her side, while her mother, the noble queen, goes back to her king at Belgium that she may stand there under the German fire, she herself a Bavarian princess.

THE TRAGEDY OF YOUNG MANHOOD.

More tears come when one reads in the world periodicals that the flower of Great Britain's young manhood, drawn from every activity of the nation, to be thrown in the trenches to fight and die in the bloodiest war on record.

And just as great we must remember in the tragedy of poor little Hans and Gretchen in their German peasant

Or If Bothered With Falling Hair or Itching Scalp.

When your hair turns gray, faded, or streaked with gray, get from any good pharmacist about seven ounces of ordinary, plain liquid Q-Ban. Apply to hair and scalp at night, like a shampoo, rubbing it in gently with the finger tips. Your hair will then be beautifully darkened so evenly and naturally that no one suspects you use Q-Ban. It darkens the hair completely to where hair joins the scalp. Q-Ban also makes your hair soft, fluffy, thick, giving the hair that dark brown, fascinating luster and abundance which makes the hair so attractive. Q-Ban is not sticky or messy, hairless, and is delightful to use. It does not dry the hair, but keeps it soft and ready to apply. Also stops dandruff, itching hair or itching scalp. home. They were not of the war party. They went when their father went, and they stand empty handed by the faithful German mother upon whom the burden of this war falls with cruel heaviness.

And the Russian emigrant mother who gave up her all and boarding the first ship, which sailed for so-called "Jimmie America," clasped her babe to her breast as she stepped on the long journey. Half way over the little one died, but she held tight the little rigid body till the boat landed, and then from her prostrate form it was taken by kindly hands and buried on American soil.

How much longer, O Powers That Be, in heaven, on earth, must this tragedy of nations go on?

CAN WOMEN HELP?

Under the caption: "Can Women Help?" Norman Haggood writes in Harpers' Weekly.

"It is frequently asked what the large organizations of women can do to hasten peace. It is doubtful if they can do much at present. Their voice, however, ought to be of weight in bringing about a mood, in neutral countries, which will lead to a more sympathetic attitude towards Germany, exact such compensation as cannot be avoided, and leave her with all the opportunities which the good of the world ought to have. If the war will be a matter of exultation or revenge, will be a matter of a few months from now. Said Haggood.

"Break not, O woman's heart, but still endure

"Woman is paying the heaviest price in the war now as always. On her we must lean heavily for generosity soon. In doing justice to her after the war we shall take a long step toward making such a return to slaughter merely a dream of the unenlightened people."

"The war is proving the ability of women in civil service. At present the cities of France and Germany are being run largely by women. There are women police, women train conductors, subway operators, girl newsboys, women postmen and chauffeurs, and old lady justices of the peace. Women fill the beds and make the beds. Nor despite the military excitement has there been any deficiency in these operations. All departments always open to women are filled as before, proving the great surplus of feminine activity in Europe.

With every able man off to the front, mother has taken up father's job as a matter of course. Not are the traditional duties of 'woman's sphere' being neglected. Never has more sewing been done, more nursing, more home labor, in simply all branches. Young girls and boys take an equal share of home keeping. Girls have discovered that boys who expect to cook their own meals in camp later can take their training at home. Paris, in particular, looks like a big school for the municipal training of women. This outlet for their emotions has helped to prevent the hysteria of former wars. Given their chance, women are showing their active patriotism in war and proving their fitness for the same patriotism of peace."

Miss Donna Stone Entertains.

One of the most beautiful parties of the season was given Saturday by Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Stone, at their residence, 287 St. Charles Avenue, in compliment to their lovely little daughter, Donna Stone, who celebrated her twelfth birthday.

Covers were laid for thirty, and the handsome oval table had as a centerpiece a massive birthday cake beautifully embossed and lighted with twelve candles.

At each place was a tiny lighted candle and dainty favors, and a delicious ice course was served.

There were many games, both indoors and on the lawn, and the most novel feature of the afternoon was the moving pictures made of the young hostess and her guests.

Lovely prizes were awarded. Little Miss Stone was a picture of girlish loveliness in a dainty dress of lace and ribbons over pink silk. Mrs. F. O. Stone was becomingly gowned in white crepe.

HOAGVILLE, GA.

Mrs. and Mrs. Hume left for the bride's ancestral home at Farrill, Ga., about a few days before going to Mobile, Ala., for the approaching wedding of Miss Cordelia Veal has gone to Mobile to spend the winter with her sister Mrs. J. P. Jones.

Mrs. E. P. Jones announced, by handsomely engraved cards, the marriage of her daughter, Grace Ellen, to Mr. Lawrence Farrington Gillette, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, Dr. G. G. Byrd, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, officiating. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Gillette left for a brief visit to several points in Tennessee, terminating which they will return to Rome and be with Mrs. J. L. Bass for the winter.

FORD-SCHAUT.

Statesboro, Ga., October 3.—(Special.) For the bride-elect, Miss Minnie Ford, whose wedding to Mr. W. J. Scaut, occurs next Tuesday at the Baptist church at this place, Mrs. J. H. Brett, assisted by Miss Inez Peck, of Cedartown, entertained very pleasantly this afternoon with a miscellaneous shower. Mrs. A. W. Quattlebaum invited the guests to the dining room, where punch and sandwiches were served by Mrs. Homer Simmons and Mrs. W. B. Moore. After the refreshments, each guest wrote a toast to the bride-to-be in the bridal book. Frances and Katherine, the little daughters of the hostess, pulled a little express wagon filled with housekeeping, stated that he had enjoyed the evening extremely, and that the groom went back and assisted in the preparation of the supper. The groom, much the bride's senior, had kept bachelor hall; had studied chafing dish methods, and dietary cooking, and the bride, young and inexperienced, is taking her first lessons in culinary art from the groom and a cook he is "training in."

"I can't say I approve of that," said a lady hearing the story. "Women are getting farther away from the things essentially theirs to do. It may spoil this young bride to a few months to have her husband relieve her too readily of the burdens which must be hers."

There are two sides to this question, however, for maybe if men knew a little more about the problems of housekeeping, they would not be as critical as some of them are. A man's direction is oftentimes much more considered by a certain element of menials than is the woman's, and if housekeeping were a little better balanced, with the man and the woman coming closer together in the solving of the problems, there might be fewer young people unhappy over the problem of living and more of them starting out with the love notes that formerly sounded in the honeymoon, vine-clad cottages. Maybe there would be less cramped up existences in the expensive apartments of the city and more of the untrained girl and the untrained man would share some of the home responsibilities and become interested in working out together the little domestic problems.

ROME, GA.

The Club of the Nibelung, at the annual autumn meeting, was entertained by Mrs. Nancy White Johnson at her home on Broad street Tuesday afternoon. The study for the winter is the evolution of the drama, and the first program dealt with the origin of tragedy. Mrs. Charles R. Pitner, Miss Jessie Elme and Miss Lucile Watters furnished the paper on the interesting subject chosen by the committee.

The flower festival conducted by the Woman's Suffrage association was the event of Wednesday and Thursday. Mrs. Glou A. T. Fuller of Macon, the guest of Mrs. Jonts De Joumette, suggested the pretty benefit and kindly assisted the ladies in promoting it. A wealth of flowers, cut and potted, filled the room in the Cherokee Life building, and the pretty and popular girls sold them for the benefit of the Associated Charities. A beautiful wreath was woven and placed upon Mrs. Wilson's grave.

The marriage of Mrs. Annie D. Hoyt to Mr. Favensl Burns, of Mobile, Ala., was a gentle surprise to the friends. The marriage was solemnized at St. Peter's Episcopal church at 10 o'clock, just preceding the departure of Mrs. Hoyt to her home at Dothan, Ala. Following the ceremony

Mr. and Mrs. Hume left for the bride's ancestral home at Farrill, Ga., about a few days before going to Mobile, Ala., for the approaching wedding of Miss Cordelia Veal has gone to Mobile to spend the winter with her sister Mrs. J. P. Jones.

Mrs. E. P. Jones announced, by handsomely engraved cards, the marriage of her daughter, Grace Ellen, to Mr. Lawrence Farrington Gillette, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, Dr. G. G. Byrd, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, officiating. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Gillette left for a brief visit to several points in Tennessee, terminating which they will return to Rome and be with Mrs. J. L. Bass for the winter.

FORD-SCHAUT.

Statesboro, Ga., October 3.—(Special.) For the bride-elect, Miss Minnie Ford, whose wedding to Mr. W. J. Scaut, occurs next Tuesday at the Baptist church at this place, Mrs. J. H. Brett, assisted by Miss Inez Peck, of Cedartown, entertained very pleasantly this afternoon with a miscellaneous shower. Mrs. A. W. Quattlebaum invited the guests to the dining room, where punch and sandwiches were served by Mrs. Homer Simmons and Mrs. W. B. Moore. After the refreshments, each guest wrote a toast to the bride-to-be in the bridal book. Frances and Katherine, the little daughters of the hostess, pulled a little express wagon filled with

Ludden & Bates Are With You

We are heart and soul in sympathy with the nation-wide movement to uphold the price of cotton. For nearly half a century we have shared the prosperity and adversity of Southern Cotton Growers, and we eagerly seize this opportunity to show by our action as well as by advice and counsel that the House of Ludden & Bates understands and appreciates the present crisis and has the courage to meet it squarely.

As the oldest and largest piano house doing business with the farmers of the South Atlantic and Gulf States, we consider it our duty and therefore our pleasure to assist every cotton grower to hold his cotton for a fair price.

We heartily indorse the advice given by Mr. McAdoo, our most efficient Secretary of the Treasury. Take no counsel of fear! This is the time for courageous action. Hold your nerve and your cotton. The war will soon be over. Go-operate with us and other merchants and manufacturers who are working in your interest and we will win the day for King Cotton and pave the way for prosperity such as the South has never known before.

We are offering to take 1,000 bales at 10c per pound from those who owe us. In addition we are urging the leading piano manufacturers, for whom we are exclusive Southern agents, to buy 100 bales each and hold them off the market.

Expert on Gardens.
 A woman who owns beautiful gardens and who has a great deal to be made beautiful, will find rare interest in the lecture to be given next Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the executive mansion by Charles W. Leavitt, of Washington city, civil and landscape engineer for the United States government. His subject will be "Garden Planning."

The woman's guild of St. Luke's church has secured this valuable attraction and a nominal charge of 50 cents will be made at the door to hear the noted expert.

While Mr. Leavitt's office under the government calls mostly for a handling of the broader aspects of the garden theme—such as applied to parks, the laying out of cities or sections of the beautifying of extensive tracts like the grounds of universities or other large institutions, the miniature or the average home garden runs to small parts of his interests, and his lecture Friday will be full of suggestions for the development and beautifying of these smaller gardens and of methods for securing the greatest value out of limited space.

At the same time, students of the broader phases of the subject—the larger conception in landscape gardening—will be provided intelligent and information.

MRS. JOHN LOWERY, of Carrollton, Ga. Mrs. Lowery was formerly Miss Christine Fitts, the charming daughter of Dr. W. L. Fitts, of Carrollton, before her recent marriage.

The magazine study, "Germany's Capital," was led by Mrs. Lena Lewis. Miss Howard, the gifted expression teacher, gave two readings followed by the poem which was much enjoyed. COX COLLEGE NOTES.
 The literary club will be made quite a feature of the year and there is much enthusiasm among the girls. The membership of both the Philologist and Sidney Lanier clubs has been greatly increased by new members and plans for cultural work in the lines of literary, music and art are quite interesting. Both clubs held meetings on Saturday afternoon which were informal little receptions for the new students. A program of numbers for piano, violin and voice was a happy feature. The newly-elected officers for the year are: Philologist club, president, Irene Singleton; vice-president, Opa Bogart; collector, Louis Arnold; treasurer, Annie Hill; censor, Cecilia Jones; chaplain, Helen Dunlap, and for Sidney Lanier club, president, Wylene Nance; vice-president, Helen Reeves; secretary-treasurer, Mary Colley of Dawson, Miss Ruth Galt of Washington, and Miss Lilla Cheshire are among the new students who will arrive Monday to board in the college.

The large new gymnasium, with its complete modern equipment, is the scene of much pleasure these days. Besides the regular work under the physical director, the girls themselves enjoy recreation here in the evenings and early mornings.

The September Cox college bulletin has been received from the press and contains some very interesting facts about the institution. Several thousand copies have been issued.

Treat Tuberculosis with Lime

THE MEDICAL RECORD (New York) of December 18, 1909, contains an exhaustive discussion of "The Treatment of Pulmonary Tuberculosis Based on the Assumption That the Dietetic Cause of the Disease is Lime Starvation," written by Dr. John F. Russell

In the course of this article Dr. Russell says: "The condition which is recognized as preceding the active development of tuberculosis in the adult may be considered as due to lime starvation. Among inorganic substances, lime salts appear to be of special physiological importance, but if the salts are not in organic combination, it is difficult to suppose that the cells can appropriate them for food."

Madame Ise'bell Beauty Hints

A lot of girls are returning from their vacations with a nice little V of reddish brown flesh displayed at the opening of their dresses. My mail is already heavy with requests for something to take care of the neck, and I prophesy that when the dancing season begins and these girls wish to put on real low cut gowns that the wall will be even thicker.

A few years ago when it was the custom to go without hats at the seashore and at the mountains, the majority of girls noticed this fashion that at the end of the summer their faces were as red and rough as we would expect to find in a football player. It took months of some of the best facial treatments to get the skin in a normal condition and in the case of older women I doubt if the skin ever recovered from so severe a burning.

The hottest cause seems on the wane and girls have learned that summer follows long exposure of the unprotected face. But they have evidently learned this lesson all over again in regard to the throat.

Skin of Neck Burns Easily.

In the first place there is nothing to shade the throat and neck; the hat brim is too far away. The skin of the neck is so fine and delicate, naturally so white, that I hate to see it exposed. I have seen it crossing the bridge of the nose, the steady, constant effect of the sun's rays, noticed some few wise women wrapped their scarfs about the neck and shoulder when wearing a thin blouse in the sunshine—but it is the foolish young who are considering now.

Fortunately, the action of skin sheddings always going on, and there are whitening creams and soothering toilet lotions.

I lubricate the dry areas of skin that the sun has too warmly caressed, and, little by little, the water-softness of the natural skin will return. But don't let the lesson be forgotten.

Sunburn, as has been said over and over again in these columns, can be very largely avoided, or its bad effects at least mitigated, by protecting the skin with a good cold cream and a covering of powder.

Now for a little advice in regard to the condition of the scalp and hair. The natural shedding of the hair continues all the year, but it seems to be more heavy in the autumn. This natural falling should not occasion any alarm, but make sure it is the natural falling and not due to any diseased or torpid scalp condition.

Danger to Hair in Hot Weather.

The girl or woman who has passed the summer in town, subject to excessive heat is particularly exposed to scalp trouble now, for the acidity in perspiration often produces dandruff and even eczema. Dandruff-infected scalp will not only cause the hair to fall, but prevent new hair from growing; a most dangerous condition at this time of the year when we expect to start a new crop of hair.

The dandruff that comes from excessive perspiration is apt to be of the itchy oily kind that leaves the scalp red and irritated when removed. In treating this remember never to scrape the dandruff away with the fingers or a comb before thoroughly softening it with vasoline or sweet oil.

The night after a shampoo go over the scalp—if you prefer to have someone do this for you—and cover all the dandruff spots with either of the lubricants mentioned above. Let this remain overnight and in the morning shampoo with pure white castile soap, using a fine bath spray vigorously afterwards, not only to rinse, but to invigorate the scalp.

When the scalp is perfectly dry apply a tonic containing either resorcin or bichloride of mercury; these are best specifics for dandruff. If there are any inflamed red spots cover them with dry boracic acid.

The hair should be well brushed daily, shaken out and the scalp bealred. Take care that the brush and comb are scrupulously clean.

If the dandruff is of the kind that irritates the scalp, I do not think much scalp massage advisable. Care should be taken not to irritate the scalp. The head should be treated to a shampoo as often as the dandruff collects and remember to keep the scalp always aired and clean.

A DELIGHTFUL FANTASY AT THE MONTGOMERY

"The Patchwork Girl of Oz,"
Production.

Probably the most successful writer of fairy tales and nonsense prose in this country is L. Frank Baum, the author of "The Wizard of Oz" and the many other Oz books. Mr. Baum has written twenty-six volumes of children's stories and several plays based on them. The "Wizard of Oz" with Montgomery and Stone, and "The Gingerbread Man" were among the biggest stage successes of their time. More recently "The Tik-Tok Man of Oz" has taken the Pacific coast by storm, and is expected to New York some time during the present season.

"The Patchwork Girl of Oz" is a delightful fantasy, brilliantly produced. It is characterized by beautiful exterior scenes and interiors, splendid photography and last but by no means least, just about the prettiest lot of girls that has ever been gathered together in one film play. The story has all the delicate humor of the author, other words "children" will love it. They will see it, grown-ups will become children again.

The Oz Film Manufacturing company has made a debut which places it in a decidedly strategic position on the motion picture map.

Exquisite Italian landscapes, sumptuous interiors and costly gowns lend an air of richness to the entire film. Particularly striking is the pink scene in which the stunted and broken-hearted Lolette returns from the mansion of her rival, as she walks beneath the trees a shower of leaves deluges her and she feels that they are symbolic of her own love story, which has outlived its smiling summer.

Several notable effects contribute to the unusual interest of the story, one of them the scene at the reception when Lolette, through the glass doors, watches her treacherous husband kiss her rival; another when she approaches the triangular mirror and attempts to kill herself.

But the film does not rely upon minor tricks or stunts, but for its interest it is a powerful drama, thrilling at times, dull never, and with always the artistic atmosphere of the studio, whether rich or poor, to lend its beauty to the general effect.

AT THE GRAND

SCENE FROM "ST. ELMO."

It is with the utmost of pleasure that the Grand management announces this week the engagement of two of its greatest offerings, "The Master Crackman" and "St. Elmo." The latter will be shown on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and "The Master Crackman" will open the week's engagement.

Headlined as a stupendous production, brilliant in photoplay, elaborately staged and acted out a dramatic triumph, "The Amateur Crackman" has already played a limited number of performances. When a conflict occurred last Monday between the Grand management and the promoters of "Casibus" over prices, "The Master Crackman" was substituted for "Casibus." It immensely pleased the large audience who had come to see the bigger picture, and who refused to accept their money back after having seen the Crackman offering.

This alone is commendation a plenty. It is a story built around conflicting phases of human nature and life. From scenes staged in hot-bed of New York scenes, to the underworld and police methods, flashing later to the alluring west. Its characters are society folk, criminals, detectives—and countless other interesting types of humanity that make our American dramas so absorbingly attractive.

The picture was produced by the Progressive Picture corporation, and is in six reels.

The booking of "St. Elmo" is considered an achievement by the Grand. The picture is not only tremendous expensive, but has been in constant demand ever since its triumphant run on Broadway. The Balboa company of California, proudly admit that it is their most splendid offering, and declare that they have produced a drama that catches everything money, skill and artistry could provide, as well as an all-star cast such as which have made the Balboa studios famous.

"St. Elmo" is in six reels. It is a concise story of the undying "St. Elmo," as written by Augusta J. Evans. It contains 134 scenes, and comes here after a wonderful success at the Strand theater, New York. Northern critics pronounce it a classic telling of its marvelous treatment of the many tender themes and branding it a photoplay that revolutionizes motion pictures and sets a standard that will endure for ages.

"St. Elmo" is expected to set a precedent for motion picture audiences. It will be shown for continuous performances from 12 noon until 10:30 at night. The Grand's popular prices will obtain. Ladies and children, at matinees, 5 cents.

TWO BIG FEATURES AT STRAND THIS WEEK

Popular Motion Picture House
Presents "A Gentleman
From Mississippi."

The Strand offers this week two of the most talked-of features of the day, on Monday and Tuesday. The William Brady Picture Play company presents Tom Wise in "A Gentleman From Mississippi," in five parts, and on Thursday and Friday the big George Kleine feature, "The Naked Truth," in five parts, featuring that most wonderful actress Lyda Borelli, said to be the highest priced motion picture star in the world, or description of this latter picture will be found elsewhere on this page.

C. Judson, the critic of the moving picture world, reviews the New York production of "The Gentleman From Mississippi" as follows:

"It has the good characters, especially Senator Langdon, who is played by Wise himself, and who is a typical old-style, gallant southern gentleman, owner of a cotton plantation in Mississippi. The story, and the flavor of these characters is about the same as in the original production. This is a big point—means that the picture has a dozen interesting studies of types. Then it also has the story told by the play, or even of it to be very interesting. The story is particularly interesting, and the picture has been able to develop portions of it that the stage could only suggest—the scenes in the home town, the senator's cotton fields, the Mississippi river, etc.

"The acting is worthy. There is nothing lacking in the work of those who portray the nine chief roles, although there is an especial flavor in Tom Wise as the senator. Really all the lesser roles are also well taken. The backgrounds are southern scenes, actual and convincing; scenes in Washington, that, of course, are actual, and interiors. All amply explain and interpret the story, and all are excellent photographs. A real old southern mansion was chosen to be the Langdon home. A real cotton field is the background chosen to show how he looks after his negro help. Some southern villages serve as background for the political parade when Langdon is nominated as senator—in Mississippi that means elected. When the senator is in the house of the senator there is a touch of way-back southern humor in the persuasion of Langdon to take the nomination—the comedy points its revolver—fifty of 'em—at him and he accepts.

"There had been some talk in the home town of a new navy yard. The senator was going to buy. Langdon wouldn't speculate in swamp lands to sell to Uncle Sam at a big advance, a thing the congressman from the senator in Washington and gets him drunk, then gets him to invest the money in cotton. The object is to force the senator into contact with two factions. On one side is an honest newspaper man who becomes his secretary; the other is led by two grafting senators and the congressman, and with them is a society woman. His eldest daughter and his son side with these, while his younger daughter sides with the congressman from the senator falls before the charms of the society woman, and just escapes being married to her. The son on the last two acts is very pleasing and cleverly contrived. The climax of the senator's plan to turn the tables on the schemers when it has been reported—and truly, for the son had bought the picture, the senator's name—that the old man is the chief owner of the property. It is a good scheme, and it attaches his enemies with his eye at them like a bombshell on the floor of the senate chamber."

AT THE STRAND

Scene from "The Naked Truth," George Kleine's latest production, featuring the celebrated European star, Lyda Borelli. At the Strand, Thursday and Friday, October 8 and 9.

ETHEL BARRYMORE IN "THE NIGHTINGALE"

Miss Ethel Barrymore will be seen on the screen in the very near future in the play that this famous actress made such marked success in before the American public, "The Nightingale." The picture of this production is the first that Miss Barrymore has attempted before the camera, and as viewed by the critics at the studios of the All Star Feature corporation, she has added another triumph to her already remarkable career.

"The Nightingale" is one of the many productions of the Alco Film corporation, who have established a policy of presenting to the public the highest standard of refined and educational photoplays. "The Nightingale" will undoubtedly furnish a most delightful spectacle, as we recall the struggles and triumph of the organ-grinder's daughter, whose sweet, melodious voice charmed her street audiences and paved the way for her subsequent eventful life. Full of pathos, dramatic situations and episodes that are so graphically portrayed on the moving picture screen.

VERNA MERSEREAU IN NEW KALEM TRAGEDY

Photoplay patrons who saw Kalem's two-act drama, "The Dance of Death," will be glad to learn that Miss Verna Mesereau, the danseuse who played the role of the Hawaiian dancing girl in that production, will be seen in "The Dancer," a new two-act Kalem tragedy, Monday, October 5, at Alamo No. 2.

Miss Mesereau is recognized as one of the foremost exponents of classic dances and "The Dancer" renders "The Dance of the Pyramids" and "The Dance of Rameses." The story itself tells of how De Forrest, a millionaire, falls madly in love with Evelyn Wade, a dancer.

Due to the millionaire's machinations, Evelyn finds that her vaudeville contract has been broken. The girl later marries De Forrest. The social whirl causes her to forget the aged mother who is dependent upon her. As time passes, Evelyn's jealousy causes her husband's love to vanish. The dancer discovers that De Forrest

LATE BROADWAY SUCCESS COMES TO THE STRAND

"The Naked Truth" to Be Shown Thursday and Friday.

"The Naked Truth," George Kleine's latest film venture, which is to appear at the Strand theater on Thursday and Friday, October 8 and 9, is a story of wrong appeal, to women, Lyda Borelli, who plays the role of Lolette, the artist's model, shows a deep appreciation of human nature and a thorough understanding of the depths of a loving woman's heart.

The story is taken from the sensational French novel by Henri Batallie. Lolette, a pretty model, falls in love with and marries Pierre Bernier, a poor and hitherto unsuccessful artist. Under the influence of her wonderful Pierres mediocre ability blossoms into genius. He wins the grand prize, attains riches, fame and social position through the constant, loving assistance of the ever-faithful Lolette. Wealth leaves her unscathed. Pierre it blinds. He involves himself in an affair with the Princess Dupont, despite the pleadings of Lolette and all her schemes to win him back.

Into the part of Lolette, Miss Borelli injects a personality and understanding that wins a quick response from the auditor. Her absolute devotion to the fickle Pierre, her pleading in the face of sickness and poverty, her childish, humble, simple love forcing back the obstacles to Pierre's progress and her sold faith in him to the very last, are both beautiful and pathetic. The scene in which she pleads on her knees with the princess, begging only that she leave Pierre alone, is a bit of emotional work that lives long in the memory. With Lolette love and life were synonymous. All his riches and the comforts with which they could provide her left the pretty model unmoved. She wanted Pierre's love. Without it the material things of life faded into insignificance.

"The Naked Truth" comes to the Strand from the New York Grand Theater, New York's latest and most beautiful playhouse.

is interested in an actress. Filled with anger, she decides to return home. Too late, she discovers that her mother had died in want. The realization of what her selfishness had brought about fills Evelyn with remorse. That night, a policeman, patrolling the water front, discovers the dancer's hat, gloves and purse lying on the pier.

"THE FORTUNE HUNTER" AT ALAMO NO. 1 MONDAY

A Story Full of Thrilling Incidents and Bits of Comedy.

The "Fortune Hunter," in six acts, from the play of the same name, by Inghill Smith, will be the attraction at Alamo No. 1, Monday and Tuesday, at 8 o'clock Monday and Tuesday, October 5 and 6, with Weston Ellis in the leading part. The story runs as follows:

Nat Duncan and Harry Kellogg are college mates. Nat is the son of a supposed very rich man who has nothing but the expenses of an education. While Harry is in his diggings hard at work to make good in his college course, he finds Nat with riotous companions of both sexes, holding two automobiles insufficient to carry the large party he is entertaining, and resulting in his arrest for stealing a trolley car and telephoning to his father to bail for him.

Nat's father dies when it is discovered that the estate is bankrupt. Harry secures for him a berth as commercial traveler with Bartlett & Co., and after playing billiards, giving midnight suppers, playing the games and other expenses, his career as a commercial traveler brought up with a round turn, when he sends home an account with expenses "Maister Kellogg," as he is called, and Nat is actually contemplating suicide, when Harry conceives a plan for his friend's future which he knows cannot fail. This is nothing more nor less than a marriage with the daughter of the wealthy banker in some quiet village.

engaged to Josie, the banker's daughter, and then Betty discovers for the first time that she loves Nat herself, and there being a heartache which grows keener as the months go by. A rival to Nat's affections is Roland, a clerk in the Lockwood bank, and he, believing that the interloper must have an unwelcome plot, keeps Nat's messages to unreach him. Nat has been very earnest in his attentions to business, and has devoted much time to the study of chemistry, when the work of both inventors demand more room, the old living quarters above the store are turned into laboratories, and a new home is secured more befitting the altered circumstances of the Graham.

The metamorphosis in the girl under the influence of education and young man of refinement is most marked. He who once came home for Thanksgiving holidays creates a rival in Nat's soul which makes him give up his agreement with Harry to assist Josie, his hope for a future fortune, everything.

While Nat is demonstrating his aerograde to some capitalists who have made an offer for that and the gas machine appliances, Harry and the capitalists escape from the burning room, but in returning to the laboratory, surrounded by flames, Nat is a life-saver in its destruction, for when the fire reaches the gas tank at the side, blowing out in front of the building and Betty herself drags him impossible through the aperture, he goes to the Lockwoods with his evidence against Nat. It has the effect of making him a hero. Nat is faced by it, he refuses either to confirm or deny it, the engagement with Josie is terminated, he goes alone, and is so wrapped in folds of a new love, that both he and she are oblivious of their clothes, but does not dampen the ardor of their love.

AMERICA BEING FILMED ON HIPPODROME STAGE

"America," the great New York Hippodrome spectacle in moving pictures, which comes to Atlanta when released, is conceded to be a veritable masterpiece of kaleidoscopic wonders, recharged with the exhilarating essence of patriotic fervor, and fairly bristling with thrilling dramatic climaxes.

Some of the scenes which instantly and warm places in the hearts of audience are "The Landing of Columbus," "The Grand Central Station at New York City," which is in direct contrast to the foregoing and thrillingly illustrated the striking differences between the modes of transportation in 1492 and 1914, "A New England Farm," a delightfully tranquil scene depicting the charming beauty of primitive life in a great city, "The New Orleans levee," showing an old-fashioned moored to the Mississippi river steamer moored to levee in the Crescent City, where the darbies, all excitement, sing and dance in a way to thrill the patriot who recalls the sad incident that immortalized the old Alamo, "A Typical Virtue," vice, courage and fear meet on a common footing, only to have the scene end in the emphasis and made real by a great fire that is conquered after a number of daring rescues and fatalities in scenes which make the man stand out against all conditions.

CLEO MADISON

Storm-tossed, her hair flying to the face, she is seen in the picture, her face distorted in hate, Cleo Madison as the vengeful Judith in "The Trey o' Hearts," big serial, "The Trey o' Hearts," watched Cleo Madison as she gracefully and pondered how she would get her out of the way and at the same time encompass the destruction of her enemies.

Playing the double role (Judith and Rose) in "The Trey o' Hearts."

Earlier in this enthralling series of episodes conceived by the master mind of the famous writer, Jess Meredith, and so gorgeously produced by the master, Wilfred Lucas, and magnificently acted by all concerned, Cleo Madison was seen as the mother of the famous "The Trey o' Hearts," where she gave a startlingly realistic performance of a woman broken and full of sorrow, and finally died in a scene full of pathos.

This clever actress is giving a performance of note before she would have jumped into immediate popularity by reason of her work in "The Trey o' Hearts," but it so happens that she is a well-known actress long before she went into pictures and a series of films immortalized her entry into the silent drama.

Cleo Madison did not essay the picture game because she thought it would be easier than life on the legitimate stage nor did she enter the profession with the idea that she would have immediate success, but in fact she was never what is generally known as a stage star. At the time she was attending the Normal university of Bloomington, Ill., she had been to the theater but three times, and she had no family and knowing she would have to make her own way, she chose the stage as the means of livelihood, which really interested her.

Now Miss Madison possesses beauty in large measure, but she is more known as magnetism as well as dramatic instinct and it is characteristic of her that she never took the first part she ever took on the stage was that of an old woman—a character part which she played with her own identity and hide her charm. Her family came to California when she left college and she was engaged with a stock company at Santa Barbara, Cal., and was given the part of the mother in "Captain Swift." At this time she used to play at night time and often during the day and used to play in the quiet spot by the sea and study, not only the parts allotted to her, but Shakespearean characters and in this way she developed her intellect and acquired an ability to study quickly and at the same time let the sea air and the beautiful home and it all prove her health. She stayed with this company for a long time and met some of the most distinguished actors and played a variety of characters—the best of all experience.

Following this she went to Los Angeles and joined the Hortense Neilson

GORDON DISCUSSES COTTON SITUATION

Country-Wide Interest in "Buy-a-Bale" Movement to React in Favor of Auto Sales, He Says.

Country-wide interest in the "buy-a-bale-of-cotton" movement, launched by southern business men in an effort to move the huge cotton crop of the south, is bound to react in favor of automobile sales, according to J. H. Gordon, Atlanta representative of the Dodge Brothers who has just arrived in Detroit.

"With cotton prices lower than at any time during the past twelve years it is necessary that whatever small profits are made on the sale of cotton should be the direct object of the 'buy-a-bale-of-cotton' idea, which is being backed with such energy by business interests in general and the automobile industry in particular.

The south this year has a cotton crop of some 15,000,000 bales to dispose of and faces the prospect of a completely closed European market, for months to come. Europe annually takes two-thirds of the cotton supply, but the war has effectively stopped foreign exports. The difference this makes to the cotton growers is clearly shown by a comparison of prices for this year and last. In 1913, planters were receiving about 14 1/2 cents per pound, against 8 1/2 cents per pound quoted by Atlanta buyers on the day I left that city.

"To relieve the situation, the newspapers and business men in the southern states have been boosting the 'buy-a-bale-of-cotton' idea, and the farmers, at the rate of 10 cents per pound. This price is paid direct to the producer and is not a cent per bale, thus eliminating the cotton brokers and mill buyers' profit on the transaction.

Thousands of planters in the south found themselves well stocked with cotton at the beginning of the European war, but without a dollar for immediate sale, it was to relieve this situation that the private sale of cotton was encouraged and is being carried forward so successfully.

"No class of business men have responded more promptly than the automobile dealers in the southern cities. Every afternoon has its sale or bales of cotton in the window and many dealers are taking cotton for payment in cars. In addition, a great majority of motor car manufacturers are buying great quantities of cotton for the purpose of strengthening the standing of the automobile men with their largest class of purchasers, the men who grow the cotton.

"If the present low price of cotton results in nothing else, it has taught the people a most valuable lesson of economics. Heretofore, the owners of big tracts of land, have devoted every dollar of their income to recreation. Except in rare instances, the planter buys his entire food supply from outside sources, depending on the profit of their property for raising cattle, hogs or vegetables. They would now be in a position to sit back and wait for the rise in cotton prices, which would raise their cotton income to such a point that they could do otherwise than to be a parasite on the backs of the people.

Despite the present trend of conditions in the south, Mr. Gordon states that he reports all territory assigned to him closed up on the sales rights for the new car which Dodge Brothers will bring out this fall.

George Johnson Delivers Talk to City Policemen

Police Commissioner George E. Johnson, accompanied by Charles I. Brannan, Police Commissioner Andrew King and Councilman Jesse B. Lee, visited the station house yesterday afternoon and was given a firm hand of congratulation over his successful cadence in the late primaries for recorder. When the evening watch assembled all four gentlemen were invited to make short talks.

"During the greater portion of twenty years," Mr. Johnson said, "I have given my best efforts to the upbuilding of this police department. Whenever visiting in other cities I have always made the acquaintance of their chiefs of police and made careful inquiries into their systems and methods. The data thus gathered has been the basis for the continual fight for the increase of your pay slip on the part of Commissioner Andrew King and myself.

"I never see a policeman in discharge of his duty that I do not think of the home he represents. Should I be compelled to sever my connection with this department, by reason of being ultimately elected to the recordership, I want you still to understand that the night will not be too dark nor the day too cold for me to come to your assistance should any of you be in trouble."

Shell Disables Camera.

According to a report received at the offices of the Universal from the two camera men now at Brussels, there has been considerable difficulty in getting near the firing lines. The report, which was relayed from the London office, reads in part:

"When we first started out we expected everything would be smooth sailing, but in Brussels we soon discovered our mistake. We were afraid to poke our noses out of doors with a camera, for a camera was the badge of the spy. Finally, however, we managed to smuggle a camera aboard a train which was bound out of Brussels to a point some thirty-odd miles away where there was a fight in progress.

"We dropped off the train and stumbled through a forest into a wooded hill. Here we were lucky enough to come upon an engagement between some German, horse and Belgians. Training our cameras, we got an excellent range, thanks to the special lens installed by the Universal, and then the Belgians, suddenly, turned to flee. Just then a shell exploded near us, rendering the camera useless. The soldiers were running up the hill. Smashing open the camera box, we managed to dip out 250 feet of film before we narrowly escaped with the apparatus into a ditch. With the precious film clasped to us we turned and fled."

Following this comes a graphic account of their troubles in reaching Brussels with the film and the manner they had to exercise before the negative could be forwarded to England.

He Was Only Acting.

In producing "Bill Manages a Fight" (the seventh of the Paul West "Bill the Office Boy" series), Eddie Dillon, director of the Komic company at the Mutual studios in Los Angeles, had quite a spirited time with "Hobo" Dougherty, the ex-lightweight pugilist.

"In this production Dougherty plays the role of a prize fighter, Dillon and Dougherty are scheduled to put up a fight and the latter is to be scheduled to knock the former pugilist cold.

Dillon struck Dougherty a hard blow on the jaw. Instead of being knocked out, as per instructions, Dougherty's elbow hit Dillon's back, which was a flash and he retained with a hook to Dillon's jaw. Dillon's Irish then arose to his feet and soon he and Dillon resembled a regular prize fight.

Dillon and Dougherty pummeling each other with evident relish. The referee then stepped in and attempted to turn the crank on his machine, catching all the action on the film.

Fay Tinsler, the comedienne of the Komic company, kept calling to Dougherty to get knocked out. The pugilist finally realized that he was acting before a camera and not engaged in a regular prize fight.

He then dropped to the floor with a reluctant grunt. As he was being counted out, Dougherty said to Dillon, "Remember, Eddie, I wasn't really knocked out."

Annual Oriental Rug Sale

Camel Load After Camel Load at These Savings:

- $25 Rugs $15     $35 Rugs $17.50     $50 Rugs $30

THE Annual October Rug Sale starts out on a bigger, broader scale than ever. Unusual conditions have helped. Go back to 1913. Pending tariff changes caused American importers to stop buying. Coupled to this was the trouble in the Balkan states. As a result, Rugs piled up in Constantinople. The tariff settled, rugs began coming into America January, 1914. They came by bales and bales—hundreds and hundreds of bales. Our buyer went to New York in early July, made his selections from overloaded importers, all strongly competitive. Not only do we own our rugs under the normal market price, therefore, but for this October sale we forego much of our usual profit. There in a nutshell are the reasons for these low prices. Though we have $475 rugs for $395, and $350 rugs for $275, we feature for the opening days various small lots of rugs. These examples:

$22.50 & $25 Rugs $15
—Moussoul, Beloochistan and Shirvan Rugs. Sizes from 2.6x5 feet to 3x6 feet. 21 in all—odd rugs from several bales.

BOOK REVIEWS IN TABLOID

"Friday's child is loving and giving, Saturday's child must work for her living."

This old rhyme on the flyleaf tells its own story, and after reading a few pages about Susan Brown, Saturday's child, who is obliged to make her way through the world, the reader's interest begins to increase. At the opening of this story Susan is working as a clerk for $30 a month in the busy city. She only wishes, Susan is like all other girls, she wants friends, pleasure, in other words, wants to be like Friday's child, "loving and giving." As time goes on she is still without friends and lonely, but after the most unusual love affairs she meets, she has three thrilling love affairs to interest her. Her lovers are men entirely different and while she would rather choose the one she liked the most, she should choose the one seemed the least attractive. In the end she proved that she had made the wisest and the best choice. Mrs. Norris says that the great adventure of life is the love of a good man and a good woman and she handles in a very attractive way this story of girlhood, the life of the modern girl with all its various moods and complications.

KATHLEE NORRIS, Author "Saturday's Child."

While the author is one of the most popular in the literary field, she has, heretofore, confined her writings to books of short stories, "Mother," "The Rich Mrs. Burgoyne" and "The Treasures of the East." Her stories and yet they have a world-wide popularity, and in her later work Mrs. Norris has written a story of humor and human interest, for "Saturday's Child" is sweet and noble, full of dignity and the courage of the true womanhood. This is a big book of over 180,000 words and relates three tales in one story and in a very interesting way. It is a book that our young folk should read, and it is in the hands of our young folk that it should be read. (The Macmillan company, New York.)

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.
The Story of Dutchman. A tale of the Mississippi. By Charles Egbert Craddock. In this novel of the south, immediately following the civil war, the author has given us plenty of mystery in the swiftly changing scenes.

Through a strange series of circumstances a package containing important documents and jewels which have been hidden was stolen, and the recovery of this package, the introduction of interesting characters of a most unusual kind, attractive people, make the story bright, vivid and so full of excitement that by the time you reach the closing chapters you are so glad that you are not one of the real participants in this sensational and yet unexpected denouement.

We are frequently asked why we do not tell something about the authors and not always stop with their pen-names.

Miss Mary Noailles Murfree, so well known as the popular novelist of so many interesting books, is a Tennessean by birth, her father, the late William L. Hardy, of Murfreesboro, was one of the great authors of the south. You now understand why so many of her plots are laid in the mountains of Tennessee. It was not until 1888 that Charles Egbert Craddock was known to be Miss Murfree, of Murfreesboro, Tenn.

State and County Educational Reorganization. This Revised Constitution and School Laws of the State of Georgia. By Ellwood P. Cumberly, professor of education, Leland Stanford, Jr. university, "Oscocia is, of course, a hypothetical state, supposed to be located somewhere in the upper Mississippi valley, and this supposed location is in reference to its population, wealth, schools, etc.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.
Cathedrals and Cloisters of Northern France. By Elsie Whitlock Ross, with illustrations from Original Photographs by Vida Hunt Francis. Vols. I and II. An interesting and beautifully illustrated history of the French cathedrals—monuments to France. Among the noted places the lovers of beautiful architecture will admire Alsace—Lorraine, Champagne, Normandy, Brittany, etc. There are 235 photographs and other illustrations from original photographs. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Price, $5 for the two volumes.

Lichens From the Temple. By Robert Reinhardt Lagon. A little volume of poems, many of which have been published in The Forum and The American Magazine.

Jean Gilles, Schoolboy. By Andre Lafon. Translated from the French by Lady Theodora Davidson. Some time ago the Academie Francaise offered a prize of $2,000 for the best work of an elevated character, "Jean Gilles, Schoolboy," is the book that was honored above all others. It is said by a laborer that is a young boyhood into the teaching profession, and he seems to know what the school-boys know.

Time and Thomas Wright. By Morley Roberts. A story of how a surgeon's knife transformed a man's character. "It cleared away the mists of a dead opinion which stunted the living mind, it relieved the effect on his family and his old friends before they became used to him as a new man, the author of sternness, and self as he is and as he was he is still a puzzle to himself." It is an interesting story.

MISCELLANEOUS.
Joseph Conrad. By Richard Curle. Author of the "Conrad" etc. Very few authors have been praised by his fellow writers as Joseph Conrad. Books as well as mariners. Some have quoted him for years, and his popularity in America is increasing. A few words about the English "Conrad" who voted the best English novel published this year, and Conrad ranks third as to who is the greatest living artist. Thomas Hardy was first, followed by H. G. Wells second, both of whom are ardent admirers of Conrad and his works.

Since writing this critical biography entitled "Joseph Conrad," Mr. Curle has collected the fragments of news and reports he expected to be sent to the front at once. In his last letter from the author he mentioned that Mr. Conrad had started for Poland with his family only a few days before the outbreak of the war, and as nothing had been heard from them it was supposed that they had been held up in one of the Polish cities. As they were from London, his London friends had expressed great concern over the silence of the author of "Chance," as they thought that he was a British sea captain, he is a member of the Royal British naval reserve and, therefore, liable to be made a prisoner if he gets into German territory in Poland.

Mr. Curle's biography of Conrad gives the author's personality, the work of the man who, it is said, has written some of the finest sea stories in the English language. (Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.)

The War and America. By Hugo Munsterberg. In this interesting work on the great European war, the noted author, who is at home alike in Europe and America, related what he has heard and found on the inside of the war. He tells us of the real motives and issues and what it all means to America, therefore, every American should read what Munsterberg has to say.

In his preface the author says: "I cannot change the issues with which these people have to do, but I can speak of soldiers and strategy and the chances of battle; they speak of right and wrong, and I speak of strategy and war." (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

The Protodrama. By Henry Albert Phillips. The philosophy of its principles, the nature of its plot, its dramatic construction, are all illuminated by copious examples, throughout the entire work, and a glossary making the work of a practical treatise. Introduction by J. Stuart Blackton.

REVELL'S BOOKS ARE INTERESTING
The Wife of Joseph. By J. Bell. Author of "Wee MacGregor," "On Christina," etc. The admirers of Mr. Bell will hail with special delight another "Bell" book. While they are full of funny sayings, genuine mirth and humor, there is so much every-day truth looks like in the eye that you feel like calling them a philosopher's "fearful" words. A tender-hearted old bachelor with a kind word and pleasant smile for all which resulted in many adventures.

Everybody's Birthright. A Vision of Jeanne d'Arc. By Clara E. Laughlin. Attractively illustrated. When Miss Laughlin wrote "Everybody's Lonesome," she made many friends among girls everywhere, for they were sure she understood them as no one else did. Her new book, therefore, will be heralded with delight, for it is a warm and heart-felt story with the sainted heroine of France for its inspiration.

A Hint to Kipling.
(From Collier's Weekly).
Our idea of a good occasion for emotional thrills is the British soldiers moving by night and silently crossing the Channel, and marching into France for the first time in one hundred years. If there is any poetry left in Kipling we ought to have it now.

In Boreas winged creatures are encountered where one would least expect them. Flying fish, the size of herrings, are found in all the waters, and dove-like the King fox, we know fruit-eating bat, which the Malays call "krung."

LET GOVERNMENT AID BE EQUAL IN ITS OPERATION

In an editorial deprecating the principle of government aid to industry, The New York Times quotes The Constitution as saying, "The drama of promises has ended in a hoax." We did say that. The Times continues: "The Constitution points the excellent moral that the south should depend more on itself and less upon government."

The south has worked out its salvation before and was never better equipped to do so than now. The Times then proceeds to elaborate upon the ways and whereabouts of its conclusion that "The Constitution's advice to the south is good for every part of the country."

If there ever was a crisis in which the south needed government aid, it has come now; and The Constitution took the position that, inasmuch as the principle of government aid in other directions had been established, the south was entitled to it now, if any part of the country ever was.

We did say that the south must depend upon itself in this emergency, but only after we were satisfied that there was no further hope of depending on the government for such help as the south had every right to expect. If we cannot get the assistance due us by right, then the only alternative is to work out our own salvation. We have done it before; we can do it again.

But if it be determined that the government should hold hands off on everything, the south can get along, just as well under that policy as any other section. It is simply a question of the adoption of a principle, whatever that principle may be, followed by the equal application of it.

The Times admits the value of assistance or "intelligent help" from government in its argument against the application of the principle. Then, if there arises a serious emergency or crisis in the south, and if this principle of government help has been recognized by previous and frequent application of it, why have we not as much right to expect it as have the financial interests in Wall Street? If Wall Street gets in a pinch it comes up with a bundle of stocks and bonds and the federal treasury rushes to the rescue.

Why is this intelligent government help so good up there and so bad down here? Is it a question of security? There is no better, no more stable, security than cotton. Is it that a flurry in Wall Street pinches the whole country? This is no more true of Wall Street than of a cotton crisis affecting the staple which ever since the war has maintained the balance of trade for the United States as against the whole world, and enabled us to keep our gold at home as the basis for circulation.

It is the chief function of all governments to protect the life and property of its citizens. It is entirely proper for government to go to the aid of Wall Street to prevent collapse or panic, affecting the whole country, when it can do so without loss or unreasonable risk. Likewise, if in any other section there is threatened anything like business collapse or cataclysm and government can safely, come to the rescue, tiding over the situation and protecting property upon the same theory as it does in Wall Street, why isn't it proper and right for government to do it? Save for the goose in one thing should be saved for the gander in another. If the government is to rescue Wall Street upon a basis of stocks and bonds as collateral, why not assist the south upon a basis of cotton which, within reasonable limitations, is as safe as any stock or bond ever put upon the market?

is the underlying foundation of our currency system. Without it the gold balance in the national treasury would be materially affected. So it cannot be contended that a commodity so intimately interwoven with the financial fabric of the country is in any sense sectional.

THAT COTTON OLIGARCHY.

The evidence accumulates. In a strong communication published by The Constitution, just a week ago, J. T. Holleman charged the existence of a cotton oligarchy in the south which is chiefly responsible for the demand of all-cotton production against diversification.

In a similarly pointed and pertinent communication from H. G. Hastings, published today, the charge is forcibly renewed. While Mr. Holleman, has for years made extensive farm loans throughout the south, Mr. Hastings sells seed from Maryland to Texas, and beyond in both directions. This much we say to illustrate that both of them are thoroughly familiar with their subject.

Mr. Hastings, like Mr. Holleman, charges and gives his reasons for the charge. That there is a cotton oligarchy in the south, although he adopts the qualification that it may be an unconscious one. He charges that 70 per cent of the farmers—the tenant farmers of the south—are absolutely forced to make cotton and nothing but cotton, by landlord, merchant and banker.

That the tenant farmer is charged exorbitant prices for supplies, leaving him no possible chance for material profit except in extraordinary price seasons, when his profits are absorbed by back credits. That the system is one, although not so intended, to be compared with the system of slavery which existed in the south prior to the civil war.

That the tenant farmer, the "submerged seventh-tenths of our producers," is effectively forbidden to grow his own food crops, because it is insisted that he buy them at exorbitant prices in cotton, when produced.

That, finally, the laws are made to protect the landlord, merchant and banker, and that there is no possibility of the tenant farmer reaching a position of independence. Statements of this sort coming from two such well-qualified sources—and The Constitution has received innumerable communications approving Mr. Holleman's position—are worth thinking about.

Is it true that the majority of the men who, we have been led to believe, are the most independent, are the least so? This is the statement of men of eminent authority. If it is true, there is not only a wide field for home missionary work in the agricultural south, but a subject for careful and intensive study on the part of our lawmakers.

THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

Atlanta will welcome this week one of the largest and most important religious gatherings in the history of the south. It is the international convention of the Disciples of Christ, which convenes Wednesday, October 7, and will bring to this city for a full week the leading ministers and laymen of the Christian church from all parts of the world.

More than ten thousand delegates are expected, many of whom have already begun to arrive in the city, and the Atlanta churches have appointed a score of efficient committees, which have been working for months past to prepare for the great gathering. Some of the delegates will be entertained in the hotels and thousands of others in the homes of Atlanta.

The main meetings of the convention will be held in the Auditorium-Armory, which is the only building large enough for the purpose. The convention will be world-wide in its scope and appeal, and will direct to Atlanta the attention not only of the hundreds of thousands of members of this particular denomination, but the entire Christian world. Atlanta and Georgia are alive to the importance of this great convention, and are preparing to extend the delegates a welcome worthy of southern traditions for hospitality.

Both Governor Slaton and Mayor Woodward will participate in the opening of the convention, and hundreds of dinners, banquets and other forms of hospitality are being scheduled to take place practically every day in the week. A new departure by way of organized hospitality was brought about in the appointment of a special hospitality committee composed of over five hundred of Atlanta's leading women. This committee is entirely separate from the entertainment committee, and its pleasure and duty will be to make everybody feel at home, to add all those little touches of welcome and comfort which are sometimes forgotten in the bustle and hurry of large conventions, and to see that nothing which could possibly add to the comfort of the guests is overlooked.

Atlanta will take a pride and pleasure in extending her best hospitality to the Disciples of Christ.

THE COTTON GOWN.

The value of the cotton fabric as a material for woman's artistic attire was eloquently illustrated at the cotton ball with which the Piedmont Driving Club opened the fall social season Thursday night. In the costumes of radiant color tints, diaphanous quality, crispness and beauty of effect, the cotton fabric was raised from the traditional role of the homespun kitchen apron, and coarser garments for practical wear, to the exacting realm of the ballroom, where women vie with one another in their beauty of appearance and apparel. Never did as many Atlanta women appear to more charming advantage than they did in the strictly cotton costumes they wore, and never was the artistic in attire more surely proclaimed in a ballroom. Cotton laces in rare old patterns hung lightly over flowered muslin of exquisite design, and in the cotton brocades of the colonial costumes, the blending of colors in their lights and shades could not have been outshone in the richness of Oriental fabrics of the most expensive kind.

The old taretians in their party colors revived romantic stories of the belles of ante-bellum days, and the airy organadies and nets were a part of the very atmospheres with which the world loves to clothe femininity.

Atlanta may well pride herself that in her part of the great movement now being expressed everywhere in the interest of King Cotton that she has given in her cotton ball the first object lesson of the moment in the aesthetic, as well as practical value of the cotton material for woman's attire.

WOMAN'S COTTON EXPOSITION.

The forthcoming woman's cotton exposition to hold in Albany, Ga., the 27th, 28th and 29th of October, in connection with the state convention of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, is another striking example of the enterprise, intelligent activity and practical patriotism of the organized women of Georgia. The exposition was inspired during the first days of the campaign started by the Georgia club women urging a patronage of cotton materials and home products. The original plan, an exhibit under the auspices of the arts and crafts committee of the federation, has grown into an enterprise which puts the women of Georgia on record as presenting to the world the first woman's cotton exposition, inspired, operated and directed by women. The factories of Georgia, many of them, will make active exhibits, and there will be seen in their comparative values the cotton materials of ante-bellum weave, and those which express the highest achievement in today's textile art.

No textile manufacturing plant in Georgia can afford not to become a part of the exposition. All exhibits must be in Albany ten days before the exposition begins. Exhibits should be addressed to John Mock, secretary of the chamber of commerce of Albany, and a member of the local committee of men and women making for the exposition's success.

Beside the illustration which the exposition will afford of the cotton industry as it is in Georgia today, there will be a cotton session, a part of the official program of the state convention, to which the ablest men and women of the state will contribute their knowledge of the various angles of the cotton problem. The purpose of the women is to formulate an educative message which will present the real meaning of cotton as the section's greatest asset. They will stress its importance not only in the matter of its value as the very living of a large element of people, but the greater importance it still must be brought to, when the textile mills of the south will achieve in the aesthetic line that standard which has been reached by the mills of England, Germany and France, and which so markedly now outclasses the manufactured cotton products of this country.

It should be considered almost an economic crime to bring into Georgia from other states and sections a bushel of corn, a bale of hay, a pig, a sheep, a goat or a cow. More than that, we should be preparing now to assist in supplying the world with foods of all kinds, for which there will soon be greater and more widespread demand than ever before in its history.

A dozen or more Georgia counties have already demonstrated with apparent ease that this can be done; they are doing it today. Instead of importing grain and hay they have it to sell; instead of buying meat from others, they are supplying it to their neighbors. These are the counties in which the farmers have big bank accounts and ride in automobiles.

The importance and value of the principle of living at home applies with equal force to the one-horse farmer and the big planter. The man with twenty acres and a mule can, if he will, live at home and live like a lord. It is all in knowing how. If we could introduce here the frugal system of Europe, which must come here, with expanded population, the one-horse farmer could come pretty near building a fence around himself and family and living well from year to year. The kitchen garden can easily provide the table with food ten months in a year. Cattle can graze from eight to nine months. A quarter of an acre will provide ample space for keeping a dozen hogs. It needs only a combination of the knowledge how to do it, and the determination to do it, for the average farmer, even the one-horse farmer, to live like a prince.

When we reach that condition in the south, where each community, each county, is self-supporting, self-sustaining, then cotton will be so much velvet.

The trouble with us in its things have been too easy for us in past average years. It is all very fine in the fat years, but the inevitable year of adversity comes along and we grumble. With the next good year we smile and forget our lesson. Now, the lesson, through force of circumstances, has taken deeper root. The information contained in the dispatches published today is significant. The farmers have gotten together in many instances and pledged themselves to cut the cotton crop. In some instances they propose to make it purely a surplus crop; in others to reduce

New York Times on Constitution's Position

(From The New York Times.) Down at Washington are out in Springfield, Ill. the idea is that there can be no prosperity unless the government provides, or at least promotes it. "Intelligent help" from government is the need of the minute. The Constitution says that the government will contend that intelligent help from any source would not be advantageous, now or at any time, but there is room for difference of opinion regarding the quality of the assistance really given, or even promised by the politicians. The south wants a half billion of money printed and paid out to the planters, and there is such a proposal now pending. Because this is not done, The Constitution says that the drama of promises has ended in a hoax. The Constitution points the excellent moral that the south should depend more on itself and less upon government. The south has worked out its own salvation before and was never better equipped to do so than now. The Constitution's advice to the south is good for every part of the country. True prosperity can come in no other way, and it is an advance to which it is suspended by those who despair of the future unless government does something on a magnificent scale. Statesmen think only in multiples of millions, and think it useless to do anything over in the way of legislation unless it is revolutionary and monumental. Yet there is more to be hoped from the accumulation of little things of an ordinary sort, which pass unnoticed because of their individual unimportance. For example, bankers every day are trying to solve the problem of foreign exchange. They are working wonders, and yet the final solution lags, even when governments assist. On the other hand trade is not going forward there is over in the way of a Danish steamer Hermod with a cargo of herring. Ordinarily she would have taken it to Copenhagen, but now she fears the North Sea mines and blockade. So she brings her herring here and sells them for 1,000,000 francs of flour among other things. That is the natural solution of the exchange problem. The herring brings what they are worth here, and the steamer pays their proceeds for the flour at the rate of exchange. Exchange is eliminated and trade is promoted. Sandusky, Ohio, received an order by cable yesterday for 5,000,000 electric light bulbs. Philadelphia reports that Italy is in the market for 10,000,000 pairs of shoes, and dies, knapsacks, and other military supplies. In this city there is reported an order by Russia for automobile trucks for military uses. Two saddlery manufacturers yesterday received an order from France for 20,000 saddles and bridles. The Illinois Steel company took an order for 5,000 window frames of pattern and material which before the war it had been supposed were obtainable only abroad.

The thing to do is to remove the obstructions to such trade as is indicated, but that assistance is wanted not for that and we want to get rid of True prosperity should come as readily and naturally as the water in the lake, and not by convulsions or a gigantic effort. Nature insensibly made disease "catching," but in business it is a deliberate agent of prosperity than any number of elections or laws. The man who is not doing business should take notice that there are others who are not waiting for government or anybody else to do anything for them. There is not the least reason to believe that any man in good credit, with a showing of steady, profitable business, is going to help him to all the resources he wants. Those who have exhausted their credit, or whose trade has run out, will wait in vain for any such help. Prosperity is here today for many, for many more than in any other country.

Choose this day the road to real prosperity by selecting every possible acre of your best cotton lands in grain and insure not only the greatly hoped-for reduction in the cotton surplus at last a property owner, you plant, for it is well known that the farmer who raises an abundance of all necessities of life for many and bears a plant cotton at a price that will bankrupt the farmer who must buy his supplies.

Our Prayer for Peace.

Across the seas from us our brothers fall. Like grain before the pitiless scythe of War. Widowed mothers weep and wail, new-made. Their plaint unheeded 'midst the cannons roar. There pestilence and pain stride hand in hand. And all the land lies blackened in their wake. And steep of dancing feet and songs of joy. Closed doors, and bitter tears, and hearts that break.

Hoing Their Own Row

(From The Wall Street Journal.) Much will be gained in the cotton marketing crisis when it is realized that the want of grain is not the problem has been shifted from Washington and the shoulders of the government to the cotton growers in their relations with their creditors. Cotton growing requires large borrowing. The lenders are local bankers and merchants. The present situation of the country of agriculture has suggested that the contractual relation between banks and merchants on the one hand and cotton growers on the other is the way to restrict acreage and divert crops.

In making this suggestion Secretary Houston has taken a leaf from the banking experience of more than one community in providing agricultural credit. The Minnesota and Dakota bankers within recent years practically forced upon the farmers the policy of growing wheat on condition of lending them money. Many of these people had cultivated wheat so continuously as to wear out the soil and bankrupt their farms. The bankers looked into the situation, saw the remedy and applied it with splendid effect.

The plan of prescribing crops, rotation systems and general features of farm management that has been for years been incorporated into the leases of tenant land and tenant in British agriculture. There is no reason why it should not be employed to give a sounder direction to southern farming. Secretary Houston's plan is that the farmers should be allowed to devote to foodstuffs should be increased by agreement so that cotton areas might be reduced and thereby prevent prices next season from being unduly depressed. This can work no hardship to southern interests, because they import vast quantities of wheat, corn and meat. Texas imported several million bushels of corn from Argentina last year, and Georgia spent $60,000,000 for western corn and other products. Great progress has been made in the latter state, where it is said that 50 per cent of the income of certain farming districts is already derived from other crops than cotton.

The bankers, however, if the common business sense will show not only the way to get out of the present cotton predicament, but also the way to avoid any such catastrophe in the future. But it is the south's own responsibility to develop emergency currency and available treasury funds have been put at its service.

The way to work it out is to begin now, by sowing and planting crops for which there is abundant market and by which the cotton crop will next spring be automatically restricted.

The acreage at least 50 per cent. They are planting grain and hay and turning their attention to cattle, hogs and sheep. They are beginning to see the situation in its true light, and this beginning, grown out of adversity, will ultimately develop what we have always contended, that we have the richest agricultural section on earth.

WHICH SHALL IT BE: COTTON OR GRAIN?

By H. S. Cross. Which shall it be the cotton farmer's, the largest grain crops ever sown in the south, with agricultural prosperity, or loyalty to your idol misnamed King Cotton, with financial bankruptcy? You are now facing the greatest crisis in your farm experience, you have no choice of many roads, nor much time for decision; you have but two routes from which to choose, and only two.

Do not waste more precious time vainly hoping that some legislation of convention will change your route; such hopes are useless and lead nowhere. Your salvation rests upon yourself alone. Be men, not children, and choose for yourself.

So, great crops of grain, sow them now, and on your best cotton lands, and that day you choose the broad road that leads to prosperity.

Neglect these crops and follow again the delusive voice of that sirens no longer King Cotton, and your choice leads surely and swiftly to ruin.

You are now where The Atlanta Constitution, within the past two years, warned you that you might be "descending the steps leading to ruin" by continuing to plant cotton at prices of necessities climbing high and yet higher.

Do not be deceived with the hope that in some possible way the recent high prices of cotton will be restored. Such hopes are vain. Face the truth that you have seen the last of high cotton prices for several seasons to come.

Do not expect to see the return of high prices with the close of the war in Europe, for if it should close tomorrow the nations that have consumed so much of our cotton in the past will be bankrupt, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of cotton now in the hands of Europe's armies, and the remainder, penniless, facing famine and seeking not the comforts, but the bare necessities of life.

Competent authorities tell us that the present surplus of cotton added to the great surplus of this crop will be so enormous that, compared with the demand, the supply would be sufficient should not a single bale be produced another season, yet we all know that we cannot hold the cotton for more than a few months, and we cannot hope to hold the next season's production within a smaller limit than 10,000,000 bales.

These are real facts. Evading them because unpleasant will not alter one iota of their truth, but they are worth considering. But while true there is no cause in these facts for despair. The present outlook for the cotton farmer is as bright as the outlook for the production of cotton, with its prevailing price, is indeed disheartening, but should the cotton surplus be sold at a price of four cents, the farmer will not only gain his agricultural freedom through the proper diversification of crops, the outlook for the cotton farmer is bright, but the outlook for something more substantial than paper, is exceedingly bright.

There is a real prospect in any real prosperity among the all-cotton farmers. Is it not a delusion and a dream? Professor Bransome, of Nashville, truly says: "No agricultural section ever became rich through the production of cotton and wheat, the production of food products, coupled with live stock civilization, does make a prosperous country dividend." Now, if the cotton farmer is to prosper, he must have a comparative statistics of the average crop values of four of the richest cotton-producing counties in Tennessee, against the county of Illinois, which produces food products and raising live stock. The average crop values of Tennessee counties exceed those of Illinois by $5.22 per acre, yet the per capita wealth of the Illinois farmer was nearly one-third as much as that of the Tennessee farmer.

Choose this day the road to real prosperity by selecting every possible acre of your best cotton lands in grain and insure not only the greatly hoped-for reduction in the cotton surplus at last a property owner, you plant, for it is well known that the farmer who raises an abundance of all necessities of life for many and bears a plant cotton at a price that will bankrupt the farmer who must buy his supplies.

Prize Is Offered for Best Talk of Cotton

Albany, Ga., September 26, 1914. To the Farmers of Georgia: A prize of $5 for the best cotton plant on exhibition at the Miniature Cotton Exposition, to be held in this city October 27-30, in connection with the annual meeting of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, is offered by the committee in charge.

All cotton stalks entered in this exhibition should be placed in the underground vault on October 22, in the Albany Chamber of Commerce, marked "For Exhibition." It is also desired to secure, in addition to the exhibition plants, a large number of cotton stalks to be used in decorating the auditorium. All contributions for this purpose should reach the undersigned on the above date, October 22, in order that they may be in the best condition for the exposition. Farmers are requested to make contributions of well-developed stalks for both exhibition and decorative purposes. JOHN H. MOCK, Chairman Exposition Committee.

MAP OF GEORGIA'S GOOD ROADS NEEDED

Editor Constitution: That the Georgia legislature, during its recent session, failed to enact some adequate good roads laws seems to be an established fact; but the reasons for this failure are incomprehensible to me.

A great convention of good roads people — the A. A. A. and the A. H. A. being at its head—is to be held in Atlanta in November. Primarily, this fact begets national interest in Georgia highways, and hundreds of thousands of tourists are looking up maps and making inquiries as to the good roads of Georgia.

Many other persons professionally or commercially interested in highway improvement would like to know where Georgia's roads are located, where they begin and where they terminate; what cities and towns they connect, and what facilities they offer for their travel.

Georgia is authentically reported as having employed an average of about 5,000 men constantly during the last few years building roads. Reports not authenticated are to the effect that most of the roads are built on the same old, same old, which involves practically the same idea. A few associations, which look after the interests of any considerable number of automobile tourists to bank upon. Besides, tourists from the north who go south in the winter usually get with the attorney of a single general weeks or several months; and their inquiry is for roads over which they can reach each of the many political, social, political; or those places which have special advantages in the way of natural attractions.

The extreme southern states should occupy the same position as a winter resort as the northern states, and summer resorts where hundreds of thousands of visitors and tourists annually fill the hotels and other places of entertainment, the closing of the season by the departure of Europe's quadruple the number of persons who will seek the south as a relief from the rigors of the winter of their own country.

But Georgia must lose millions of dollars of this business because of its short-sightedness in the matter of highways. Let us solve into one on close inspection. The great reason is that there is no central authority of any considerable number of standards, and of locations. Every county is a unit, and a unit not subject to aggregation with any other county, and can not make the roads of a state. The principle of co-ordination is lacking. There would be as well added the function of the state in the matter of highways, to them—to the vast number of attractive cities and villages of the state.

The other reason is that more purely of engineering. Some counties seem to think that money paid to an engineer is so much money that they build roads without regard to their cost, and without any other consideration. Other counties employ the cheapest engineering services they can get; and, of course, the results are commensurate with the investment.

Traveling through Georgia on railroad trains, one can observe the most amazing results of the lack of a central authority. Well surfaced roads on high embankments and even on curves without guard-rail; side ditches, cut in places, and sloping away from the road, or sloping away from the road abruptly or presenting an almost vertical bluff where it is irregular.

Whenever we find an unusual street, either of travel or of machinery, the wheels of an automobile reach these ditches the result must usually be the destruction of the machine and the death or serious injury of the occupants.

Not personally observed many miles of roads with the same irregularity of construction as we find in the counties of Thomasville and Macon. All these factors and many others should be with a view to a central authority, which should be provided by the state, and which the state must provide before Georgia achieves any great success in her highway engineering. For instance, a state highway department—would survey the state on a plan which would connect with those of other counties, it could provide a highway system of a certain grade, and along modern and safe lines. It could differentiate between main roads and roads of secondary importance, and could let the public know where those roads are, and could make a map which would convey the intelligence of the condition of the roads, and could especially the coming winter when they are unable to find out where they are.

It seems to me that if some civic organization could be organized in each county of Georgia's good roads, a special session of its legislature for that particular purpose is desirable. CHARLES E. FOOTE, New York City, October 3, 1914.

SOFT DRINKS

By GEORGE FITCH, Author of "At Good Old Swash."

A soft drink is a fussy liquid made by mixing water with ice cream, syrup, fruits, ginger, benzate of soda and other enticing junk. It is called a soft drink because it is not relished by hard drinkers. Those who have cultivated a taste for brandy, rum, cognac, champagne, port and whiskey and other dissolvents of the digestive lining speak with scorn of the soft drink and make rude jokes about the siffled young man who insults his digestion with a glass of bubbly. Instead of lowering a liquid contamination into his charred and devastated hold with noble carelessness. It does not take as much puke to attack a glass of ice cream soda as it does to swallow six fingers of scotch.

Yet the sweet and yielding bitless soda has virtues of its own. They are chiefly negative. When it was asked, when the precocious operator in a 14-year-old boy runs an automobile. It does not heat his brain until he blows off a vain defiance and challenges you to a mortal combat, and it does not wander into his legs and tie them into weird designs on the public thoroughfare. It may lower his internal temperature until he combusts his meals with difficulty, but it does not make a danger signal of his nose and ears and buzzings in his aching belly. When a man has absorbed three cold lemonades he may ache inside, but the children do not hide under the bed as he wearily totes his legs about town. The soft drink is a brilliant egg phosphate does not advertise the fact by distributing samples of spoiled atmosphere to a street car load of people who can't get away from him.

Soft drinks are the product of your constitutions, but neither do they produce the soft and frazzled head which is the great specialty of the hard drink.

The Love-Blinded Girl. By LAURA KIRKMAN. "You said you'd take me to the ball game," she reproached her fiancé, when she called to him to take her. "But see what I've brought you!" he diverts, handing her a box of her favorite chocolates. "Isn't that almost as good as the game?" And in her pleasure she forgot the forfeit she had made, and she forgot the forfeit she had made, and she forgot the forfeit she had made. "I've forgotten that it can be useful as well. She's got a setter for a lap dog."

Popular Keynote All Over the South Struck by Holleman Communication Two Mills Again Start Operations In the Gold Fields of North Georgia

H. G. Hastings, of Atlanta, and Many Others, Indorse Position Taken.

The Constitution presents below three striking communications, called forth by the publication last Sunday of the article by J. T. Holleman, in which he severely arraigned the present system of financing the crops of the south.

Mr. Holleman's contribution seems to have struck a popular chord in every section of the south, and the Constitution has been in receipt of so many communications indorsing the position taken by Mr. Holleman that it was utterly impossible to give their publication.

The following communications, coming from men whose opinion on this subject is of undoubted value, owing to their deep study of the situation, are presented as valuable contributions to the discussion brought about by the extremity to which the southern farmer has been brought by the European war.

The communication of H. G. Hastings, president of the seed house of H. G. Hastings & Co., is of an unusually striking nature in its comprehensive indorsement of Mr. Holleman's statement. "Coming from a man whose business interests cover the whole south and which keep him in constant and intimate touch with farming conditions, it will be read with wide interest."
The comments from D. L. Beattie, president of the Farmers' Land, Loan and Title company, of Albany, is unusually significant in that it comes from a representative of the financial forces of the state. President David C. Barrow, of the Barrow Loan and Abstract company, of Pelham, Ga., joins Mr. Beattie in indorsing Mr. Holleman's position that the south will never come into its own agriculturally until the present system is changed.

Mr. Hastings' communication. Editor Constitution: Never have I seen such a full, clear-cut statement and condemnation of Georgia's present suicidal agricultural and business policy as was made by Mr. J. T. Holleman in last Sunday's Constitution.

In your editorial comment, after summing up the salient points you say: "This is a big indictment." It certainly is and when the evidence is all before the jury of public opinion you may be sure that a verdict of "guilty" will be found against landlord, merchant and banker who not only make this deplorable condition possible, but practically have made any change from it impossible up to this time.

There is a "cotton oligarchy," possibly what may be termed an unconscious or unpremeditated one, but a "cotton oligarchy" that has absolutely in its grip 70 per cent of our farm population, 15 to 20 per cent more partially in its grip and leaving only 10 to 15 per cent free from its crushing demands.

We have lauded the free and independent Georgia farmer as the state favored above all others in our state because of his independence. What absolute rot!

Mortgaged From Cradle to Grave. The candidates seeking votes laud his independence to the skies, but it isn't the kind of independence that gets him past the supply merchant without his signing a crop mortgage before he can get $3 worth of supplies. Practically speaking the tenant farmer is mortgaged from the cradle to the grave.

I believe that it was General Booth, of Salvation Army fame, who created a furore some years ago by alluding to the poorest of the population of London as the "submerged tenth." That "submerged tenth" of London were considered the hopeless ones, unable to lift above their environment and its influences.

What about Georgia's "submerged" agricultural seven-tenths? We have them and they are as helpless, so far as changing their condition of submergence and servitude to landlord and supply merchant, as is the dweller of the London slums to rise above his environment.

Human slavery in the south was abolished as the result of the civil war and the slavery of ante-bellum days was confined to the slavery of the black race.

Have we not unconsciously substituted for the negro slavery of the ante-bellum days what is essentially a slavery of both white and black tenant farmers to the supply merchant, landlord, etc.

Years ago some newspaper writer in Kansas (in the days when Kansas was essentially a one-crop state) acquired fame by springing the question, "What's the matter with it?" That question led to close self-analysis by Kansas. They saw the error of their way, got out a diversified basis and today, in spite of blizzards in winter and scorching winds and drought in summer, Kansas is one of the most prosperous of our agricultural states.

"What's the Matter With Georgia?" In all seriousness it's time for some of the leading papers of Georgia to ask, "What's the Matter With Georgia?" for sure as the sun rises each morning there is something seriously the matter with Georgia that needs to be cured, and what is true of Georgia is in greater or less degree true of all the southeast.

For fifteen years Georgia has had, on an average, good cotton crops. For fifteen years the average price of cotton has been above that of other similar periods and yet here, just as we are about to place on the market the crop of the sixteenth year, this year's cotton, under the present system, the usual system of marketing and a part of the consumption, and we have for the past six or seven weeks been standing with our arms outstretched to the federal government saying: "Save us, or we perish."

What think you of a system of agriculture and a system of business based on that agriculture that at this time we now have? We have confessed that it has not accumulated enough reserve in the last fifteen years to see it through one bad year without calling on outside help. This is a fact well worth pondering.

Many of our papers are going to insist that this situation ought not to be talked about. They want us to hide our heads, ostrich like, in the sand, now just as we have been doing in the past. Many of our prominent men are going to take the same position, but I believe we can come to the greater folly than this of our eyes to plain facts. The time has come when we must face these facts squarely.

Georgia Sick Agriculturally. The first step toward curing any disease is to recognize the existence of the disease, then study the symptoms and seek the remedy. Georgia, agriculturally, is sick, and has been for years. I should term it a case of "cotton indigestion," and at present the patient has an exceedingly acute attack. This has come from an almost lifetime diet of cotton.

The "forced feeding" of the "suffragettes" "hungry strikes" in British prisons the last two or three years isn't a circumstance to the manner in which cotton has been fed down the throat of both the tenant farmer and the farmer who has to have credit to make his crops.

Ten to fifteen per cent of our farmers make enough supplies to see them through. These are independent of the supply merchant and the present cotton situation means to them nothing more than temporary inconvenience.

Another fifteen per cent have probably enough to see them through the next six or seven months and these are partly independent. This leaves us with the 70 per cent of tenants, our "submerged" seven-tenths, all of whom, practically speaking, are absolutely dependent directly or indirectly on landlord, supply merchant and banker.

Farmer Forced to Grow Cotton. THIS 70 PER CENT IS ABSOLUTELY FORCED TO MAKE COTTON AND NOTHING BUT COTTON BY LANDLORD, MERCHANT AND BANKER AND THEY ARE FORCED TO MAKE COTTON ON A BASIS OF EXORBITANT CREDIT PRICES FOR SUPPLIES THAT LEAVES THEM NO POSSIBLE CHANCE TO HAVE ANY AMOUNT OF PROFIT EXCEPT IN SEASONS OF LARGE CROPS SOLD AT HIGH PRICES, AND IT IS USUALLY THE CASE THAT THERE ARE DEBTS HANGING OVER HIM FROM YEARS OF BEING IN HIS CROPS OR LOW PRICES TO ABSORB IT.

On the part of landlord, supply merchant and country banker, it's a gamble. Each year they bet the use of a certain number of acres on a certain amount of supplies (valued on an exorbitant credit basis), or a certain amount of money at a high interest rate, based on the tenant's promise of furnishing the seasons' crops. The landlord, supply merchant and country banker, at a price that the tenant will be "paid out" and when he does "pay out" or nearly so the winnings are heavy, fully heavy enough to keep the game going.

Mr. Tenant goes to the land owner or his agent, if he is an absentee landlord, and rents a piece of land. The landowner goes to the supply merchant and says he goes to the supply merchant to make arrangements for fertilizer, grain and food. He is at the start, between landlord and merchant, forced to agree to plant up to his land with cotton and to get his supplies in cotton and before he gets any supplies he has to mortgage his crop—even before the ground is prepared for planting.

It's a waste of time to talk to a tenant about growing his food and grain, no matter how good his intentions may be in that direction. He cannot, for his masters, the landlord and supply merchant, to take care of his own needs. The tenant was allowed to make his corn and oats and meat the merchant would lose control over him. He is useful to the supply merchant, and landlord just so long as he is in their interest to have him free.

Laws Do Not Protect Farmers. Every law on the statute books of Georgia on this subject is intentionally framed up to protect landlord, merchant and banker in their crooked operations. They can and do absolutely dictate to this "submerged" seven-tenths exactly what and how much he shall plant, and the white man is exactly on the same basis of essential bondage to them as is the black.

While the larger part of this "submerged" seven-tenths is negro it does not alter the fundamental fact that it is a land of almost universal economic, bad morally and the greatest of hindrances to real prosperity, not only on the farm, but in town and city.

With all these conditions surrounding him the tenant has no show to reach a stage of economic independence. He is a being without hope, beyond the hope of getting some landlord or supply merchant to credit him for a few dollars a year.

I have been in several of these cotton conferences and conventions during the past month. With few exceptions they have been managed by landlord, merchant and banker, the men who have staked the tenants the past season. They bet wrong this year and are now insisting that Washington take the blame for the "failure" of the cotton that is depended on to "pay out" the money going, not to the tenant farmers' pockets, but to the debts he has been forced to make. The tenants are being asked to take all that was coming to him out of that cotton before a bale of it was ready for the gin.

Reports made to the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce from the counties of 300 Georgia towns show that average advances of $44.65 had been made per acre against this crop and that's exactly where the shoe pinches. It's the landlord, merchant and banker that has been financing this dangerous, all-cotton gamble that is calling in the name of the farmer for help! It's this tenant farmers' cotton that is "distressed cotton" in that same "distressed cotton" that bears down the market every fall, cotton made, not by the free will of the farmer, but by the insistence, yes, the demand of landlord, merchant and banker.

Not the Negroes' Fault. The usual course is to place the blame for our present system on the negro, saying "raise the price of crops. This also is rot. The white man won't let him, on rented land, and yet, in thousands of instances in Georgia, the negro land owner does raise his food supplies and pay for more or than the average white tenant."

A friend of mine in a middle Georgia county met a negro the other day that worked for him some twenty years ago. Incidentally he was the present cotton situation came into the conversation and the negro acknowledged that he was "bad off" because he couldn't sell his cotton for enough to pay his debts for seed, the supply merchant, and said: "Mr. white folks, dese yere is white folks' joins. Dey won't 'low us niggers to grow nothin' to eat on dese rented farms and we jes' can't pay out."

In slavery times there was no talk about the negroes not having the ability to grow food crops. Unless I am misinformed, Georgia didn't import a pound of staple crop until the year in those days Georgia lived within her borders. Negroes were all-around farmers, not exclusive cotton growers, and they can be again if the white man will do his duty to the land he owns and to the negroes.

Landlords Are Shirking. Ownership of large areas of farm land, aided and abetted by the damnable combination of tenant and credit systems, has led the white man to shirk his responsibility and seek his ease in town or city. These white men take little or no heed for tomorrow so long as an income is forthcoming for the present.

They forget the constant deterioration of their lands, the washing away every year by winter rains from bare cotton field acres of more actual plant food than is put back every year by fertilizers, they forget the constantly growing gullies that wash the hillsides, rendering them less productive and eventually worthless except for crops of broomsage and wild pine.

The town and city farmer land owners think they are living on income. They are not. They are robbing the principal. They are robbing posterity of its just dues in the way of fertile lands.

Farm land ownership carries a moral responsibility with it and none out of town of farm land owners who in this moral responsibility, hence our present tenant system, with all its attendant evil. Apparently, their only idea is that so many bales of cotton shall come each year that they may sell it and take their ease.

Mr. Holleman pleads for the reversion of the old-time southern home, LORD, MERCHANT AND BANKER AND THEY ARE FORCED TO MAKE COTTON ON A BASIS OF EXORBITANT CREDIT PRICES FOR SUPPLIES THAT LEAVES THEM NO POSSIBLE CHANCE TO HAVE ANY AMOUNT OF PROFIT EXCEPT IN SEASONS OF LARGE CROPS SOLD AT HIGH PRICES, AND IT IS USUALLY THE CASE THAT THERE ARE DEBTS HANGING OVER HIM FROM YEARS OF BEING IN HIS CROPS OR LOW PRICES TO ABSORB IT.

Don't Blame the Tenant. We can't blame the tenant, and should not. It's his right to skin those acres of everything he can and put nothing back, and he would be a fool if he did otherwise. It's the landlord, the man who has the land, the man who has the money, and the man who has the power. He is in town or city; many of them "saving the country" in legislative halls and on the benches of our courts, while the irresponsible tenant is left to skin the land to his waist.

So far, we have shown the helplessness of the tenant and blamed landlord, supply merchant and country banker. All of this has a direct bearing on the tenant's position, and the cutting down of acreage in 1915. The control of the whole matter goes back further than the country supply merchant and country banker.

The control of the whole matter goes to the hands of the city banker, the wholesale merchant, the jobber, the manufacturer. Without their help through the extension of credit to country tenants, the tenant's position in this present system of "tenant farming" in credit basis would fall to the ground, for the resources of the country towns are limited. They cannot of their own resources finance these enormous operations.

Where Real Responsibility Lies. The ultimate responsibility for this lies in New York, in Atlanta, in Macon, in Augusta, etc. In the last analysis, the responsibility of the manufacturer, the merchant, the economic system of slavery to cotton lies. Many of my best personal friends in business circles in Atlanta are just as guilty of a share in this system as is the supply merchant in the country town.

Without the credit co-operation of these business forces of the city the tenant's position in this matter would be hopeless. It is almost as hopeless in his field of operation as is the tenant to the acres he cultivates. These city business forces have their responsibility to shoulder in this matter, and they have no other way to terminate what the 1915 crop shall be, for the credit the city extends is the foundation of this whole system. Without it the present system would cease to exist.

In several years since the public address I made the statement that no state or section could be permanently prosperous that is dependent on another section for its food supplies, and the history of nations as far back as history goes bears out the truth of this statement.

In the past we have been trading off the land of the tenant to eat, and they are now growing it and are paying the man who grows it and an expert man who handles it a profit and every railroad over which those food and grain products pass a transportation charge in his belt of operation. We are not to pay them and have anything left.

We have made a material advance in economic independence in the past years, but it has been done by the tenants and the farmers who have staked the tenants the past season. They bet wrong this year and are now insisting that Washington take the blame for the "failure" of the cotton that is depended on to "pay out" the money going, not to the tenant farmers' pockets, but to the debts he has been forced to make. The tenants are being asked to take all that was coming to him out of that cotton before a bale of it was ready for the gin.

Reports made to the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce from the counties of 300 Georgia towns show that average advances of $44.65 had been made per acre against this crop and that's exactly where the shoe pinches. It's the Search Going on for Profitable Method to Mine the Boundless Deposits of the Precious Metals.

Is electricity to add to its many miracles conquests and remarkable feat of bringing to the light of day the untold hundreds of millions in gold deposits which now lay imbedded in the gold fields of north Georgia?

So believes Dr. Craig E. Arnold, manager of one of the mines at Dahlonega, which has for many years been shut down on account of the fact that all present processes of mining the gold made it too expensive to be profitable.

Importantly, however, by the increased value of pure gold as the result of the European war the owners of two of the half dozen or so deserted mines near Dahlonega have reopened their mills, in the hope that some method may be devised whereby the 80 per cent of gold "dust" which is now lost in the mining of every ton of ore, may be preserved.

With the finding of this process, the hills of north Georgia would rank with California in its palmy days of the gold rush, and the most wealthy spots of the Klondike.

Few people know that up until the California gold rush of 1849 all the gold in America was mined in the mountains of north Georgia in the territory immediately around the little town of Dahlonega.

Not only that but of the two mints operated by the government in those times, one was located in Dahlonega and one in Philadelphia—and every gold coin made in these two mints was coined from Georgia gold.

$10,000,000 Output. Sixty million dollars worth of pure gold was consumed by the government from the Georgia gold fields up to 1849. And practically all this vast sum was picked up on the surface of the territory where the gold strata was located. In the bottom of the mountains where the action of rains and the washing of the streams had worn it from its resting place in the bed rock underground.

In other words, the deposits from which this surface output came is still untouched and awaits only the mind of the inventor to be turned into the channels of commerce.

There are hundreds upon hundreds of acres of hillsides in the mountains—gold within a few feet of the surface on the towering mountains that look down upon the little town of Dahlonega—and it is in a last effort to develop some method which it can be profitably extracted from its resting place in the solid bed rock where it now lies, that the owners of the mine's just reopened have again started operations.

Dr. Arnold believes that in the application of electricity lies the hope that the mountains of north Georgia may again be turned into a new Eldorado.

"Under all methods used up to this time," declared Dr. Arnold while on a visit to Atlanta last week, "only 10 per cent of the gold contained in a ton of ore is saved, the other 90 per cent being washed away in minute particles."

The Hope of the Future. "It is my belief that in time some electrical method will be devised whereby this 'dust' gold will be saved—and when this occurs all the world will know where north Georgia is and the name of the little town of Dahlonega will be by word of the far corners of the earth."

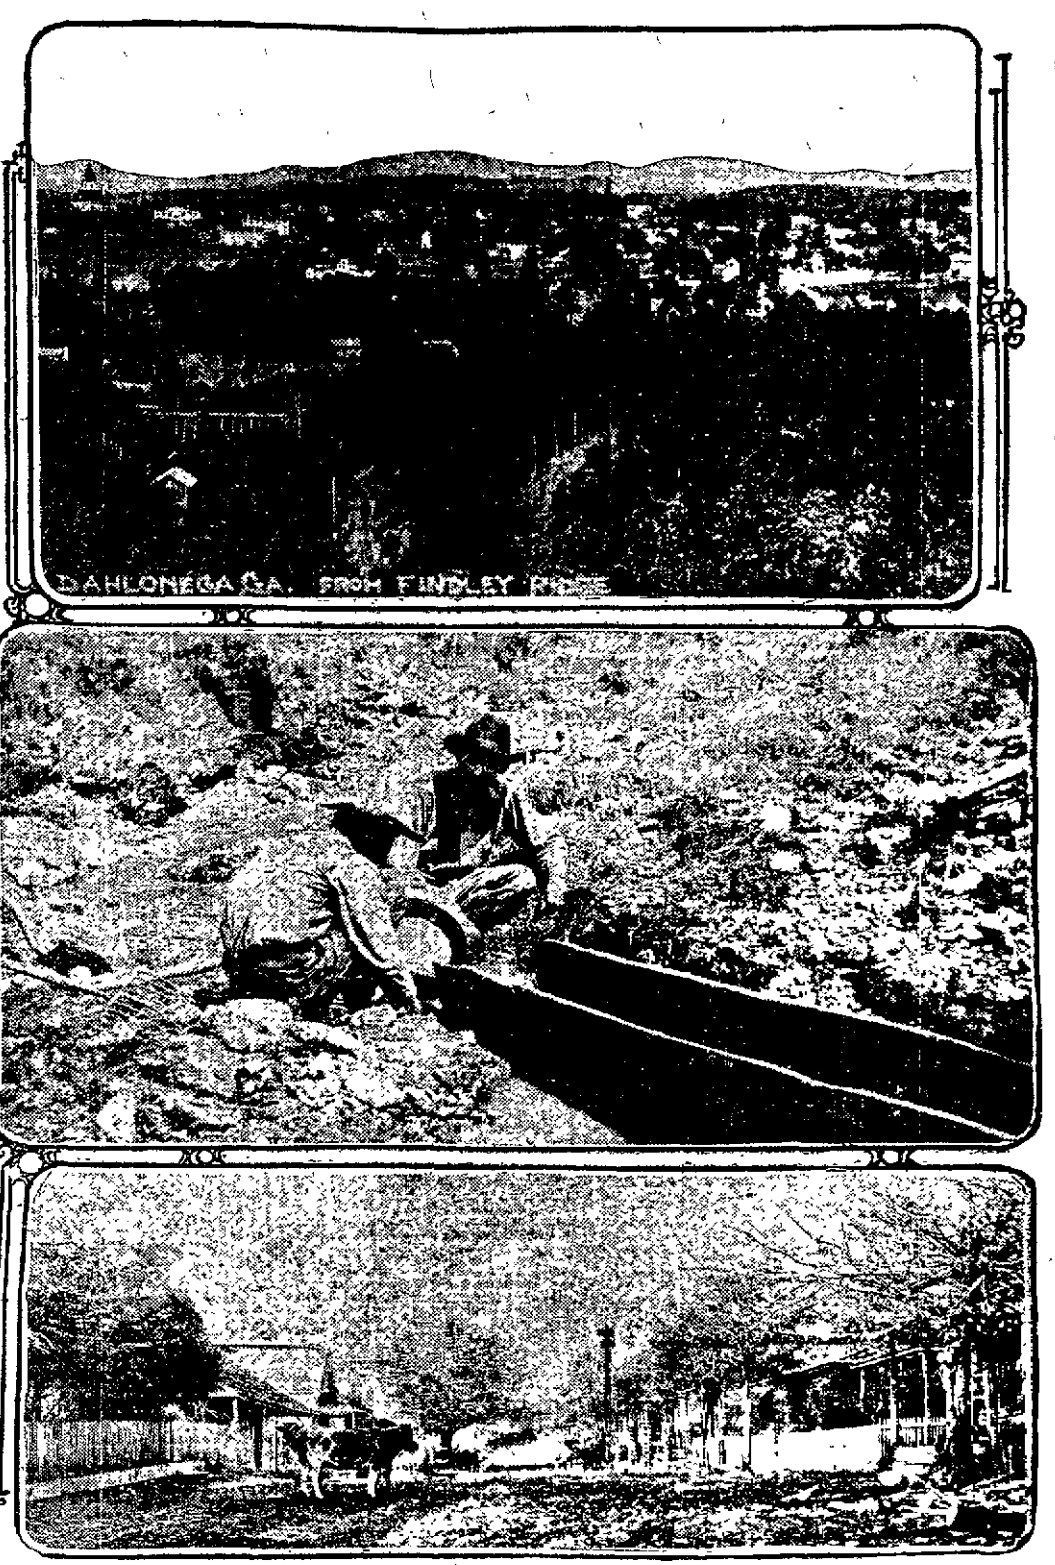

"The little children go out into the streets of Dahlonega after each heavy rain and with spoons search for grains of gold in the mud which has been displaced by the force of nature. It represents only a minute portion of the precious metal which now rests in the bosom of the mountains of north Georgia."

With the exhausting of this surface supply of gold, the bottom dropped out of gold mining in north Georgia, for there was no profitable method to reap the golden harvest which was there if it could only be plucked from its resting place.

"We are now experimenting with various methods in the endeavor to hit upon a plan which will avoid the 90 per cent waste which has been the profit of mining as it is done at present. The 10 per cent we secure just about covers the expense of the work. It can only be seen, therefore, what a remarkable opportunity for profit there is just lit upon the right solution of our problem."

History of Georgia Gold Mining. In talking of the history of the north Georgia gold fields, Dr. Arnold gave some interesting facts about the section that at one time was the only gold producing spot in North America.

How the Gold Was Mined. "In the early days the land owners into this district from adjacent states in quest of King Metal. It is said that so many of these men were criminals driven from their home and lawlessness became so rampant that Governor Gilmer in 1825 issued a proclamation prohibiting gold mining in northern Georgia and a detachment of United States troops were sent to the territory.

It is well known, DeSoto, in his search for the land of gold and honey pierced his way through the wilderness to this section and found the gold country only to receive his mortal wound.

"It is believed that the Indians from the Michigan Peninsula exchanged their copper implements for gold. Signs of mining operations in north Georgia by Indians have frequently been discovered. Several years ago I had occasion to cut down a large pine tree and I counted over 940 medullary rings, which proves that the tree was close to the five century mark. Thirty feet below the roots of the tree we came upon a sand mill constructed of water-worn, and a number of crude mining tools which had evidently been used by the Indians hundreds of years before they discovered them."

How the Gold Was Mined. "In the early days the land owners utilized their slaves during wet weather when field operations were impossible and in this spasmodic way million of dollars in gold was taken from the soil. Northerners soon flocked to Dahlonega with more capital at their command and stamp mills of ten, twenty and thirty stamps were soon in operation. These crude mills made fortunes for their owners as only the decomposed surface ores were used and the freed gold was readily saved."

"About fifteen years ago a large mining corporation was launched in which the public was invited to invest, and the celebrated Consolidated Stamp Mill was erected. It enjoyed the distinction of having the largest number of stamps under one roof in the United States. But its appetite for ores was so great that it devoured all the decomposed surface ores in but a few months time and today it stands as a mute monument to lack of foresight."

The Mistake Made. "Which brings up to the reason for the deserted condition of the Georgia gold fields for the past fifteen years. The ores are still there—but they are a different kind of ore from that which the mills can profitably use. In other words, the effort was made to fit the mines to the mill, instead of fitting the mill to the class of ore found. Hence the mute monuments of today in the shape of deserted buildings which cost thousands of dollars to erect.

"General Grant, Samuel J. Tilden, Secretary Windom and other men famous fifty years ago had their names coupled with the mining in this district immediately after the war.

"But three miles from Dahlonega there lies an ore ledge exposed for a distance of several thousand feet.

"My mill is now experimenting on a new device by which we hope to save a greater per cent of the gold than heretofore, and we are also experimenting with the appliance of electric currents. If we happen to hit the right combination—then watch the millions come out of the hills of north Georgia.

"We would like to be able to say that we were the discoverers of such a method—but we would be just as glad to receive news of such a discovery at the hands of others, for what we want is to see the gold fields of north Georgia back on the map again, and we are going to make the most determined effort that has yet been undertaken."

Would Result in Diversification. This would bring about diversification on the farm, for with only an average of one-fourth of the land in the cotton section farmed to cotton, which would be the case unless its price rose to abnormal, there would be ample room for wheat, pork, beef, etc., raised to supply all needs within the borders of each cotton growing state.

As it is now, nearly all of the "all-cotton farmers" plant from twenty-five to thirty acres of cotton to the plow, and plant only from two to ten acres of other crops, and do not properly cultivate these other crops on account of the enormous amount of work required on the cotton at certain seasons, and devote practically no time to live stock.

In fact, they figure on buying nearly everything they use on their farms and making enough cotton to pay for it and have profits besides. They can do this very easily when cotton brings from 13 to 15 cents per pound, but when it brings only 7 to 8 cents and then can't be sold at all, they are up against it good and proper.

Is Sure Remedy. There is no necessity for our farmers to buy all of their meat, live stock, hay, grain, etc., from supply merchants, who in turn buy it from jobbers

The FORMAL GOWN

THE formal gown is a thing of moment to most women, since it must serve, as a general rule, for quite a variety of occasions, such as restaurant dinners, theaters, receptions, teas and musicales, and in many places where the audience is chiefly feminine and "critical."

Katherine McCarron

WE have three charming gowns of this type in to-day's sketch. The one on the seated figure is of heliotrope taffeta. It has three accordion-pleated sounces on the skirt and a smart little buttoned bodice worn over a glimpse of white chiffon. The novel toque is entirely of white coque feathers. The transparent gown, favored by Dame Fashion, is shown in the centre. A skirt of rose-colored satin outlines the figure closely to the knees, where it flares suddenly, this is relieved by an extremely full tunic of mauve malines weighted at the bottom with a band of gold embroidery. The excuse for a bodice and the long shadow sleeves are formed solely of the malines. A wide girdle of rose satin swatches the figure at low waist-line. This frock is topped by an unusually chic hat of black velvet.

The last gown of the trio is in the "ever-ancient, ever new, always charming black and white." The soft, full-shouldered, long-sleeved blouse is of black crepe chiffon. Over a finely pleated ankle-length skirt of the chiffon is draped a triple tunic of white lace. The whole enriched by a deeply swathed girdle of black velvet, tied in great loops at one side, low toward the back. A bunch of moss rosebuds lends the color note.

IN THE NAPOLEON, THE MAN--JOSEPHINE, THE WOMAN A Journey of 20,000 Miles IN THE PATH OF NAPOLEON 100 Years After His Downfall

By James Morgan

A story of Napoleon and Josephine at home is presented by Mr. Morgan today, a close view of those two children of fortune in the brilliant days of the consulate—a word portrait of the Man of Destiny in his heyday—his stature, his face and figure, his manners with women, his gratitude—Josephine in her garden and among her friends—her extravagances and her dread of a throne as its shadow fell upon her. A day at Malmaison with the young men and women of the consulate.

A Day at Malmaison

France joyed in the consulate as the glorious summer that followed her long winter of discontent. It was the wondrous healing time for the wounds of the revolution. While Napoleon welcomed home the long-proscribed aristocrats and priests, he gloried in the restoration of the masses by confirming them forever in the possession of the property which the revolution had taken from the aristocracy and the church and sold to them. He abolished the celebration of the anniversary of the execution of Louis XVI. as a national holiday and changed the name of the Place de la Revolution, the square of the guillotine, to the Place de la Concorde.

The world was young again. Fortune had shuffled the cards and fame was dealing new hands. The private soldier and the stable boy of yesterday when they had hardly a shirt and a half between them, today found their peasant names glorified and catching the luster of the dukes and marquises and counts of the ancient nobility.

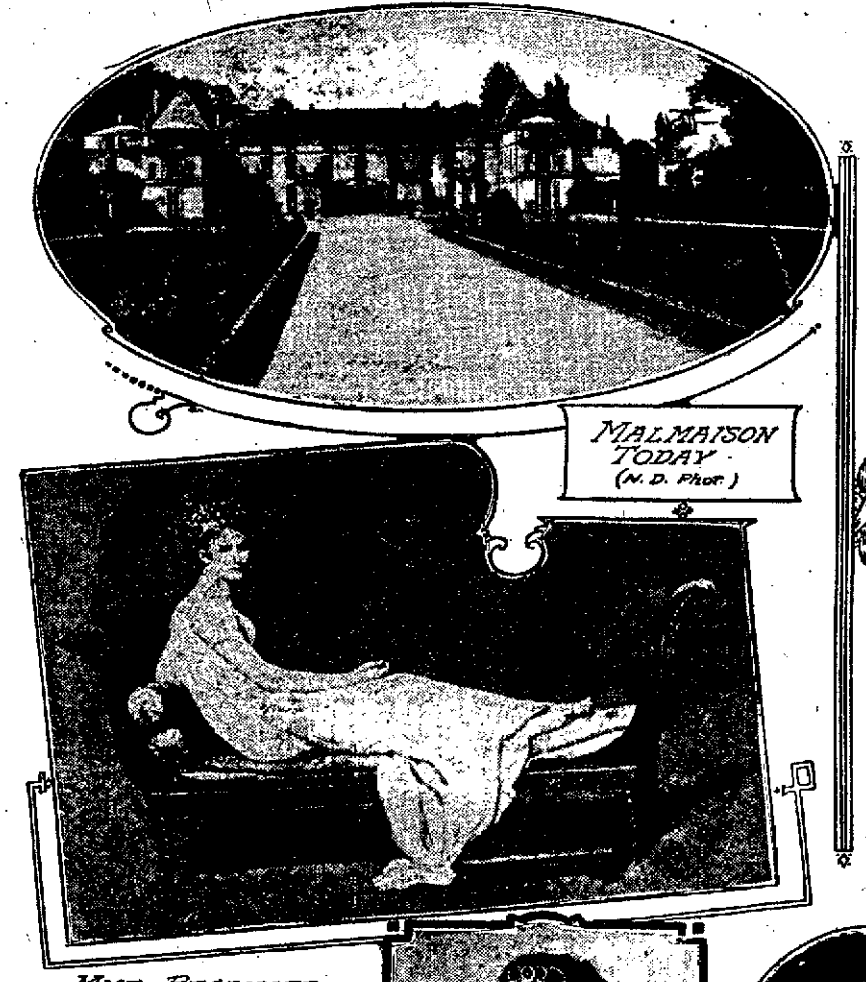

Herodotus, black as a Moor, had served in the ranks as a common soldier for a dozen years. Augustus with rings on every finger, his mistress adorned with gold and decorated even with diamonds, was the son of the keeper of a fruit stall, and had been in the guard of Frederick the Great and a private in the Neapolitan army when he was 30, after which he became a fencing master. Bessièra, commander of the guard, had carried a musket. Murat was a dyer by trade before he was a sergeant. Ney was a cooper's son, and Junot was only a sergeant at Toulon.

Yet those youthful and plebeian generals of France were welcomed like heroes in the courts of Europe. Well might Napoleon exclaim in the days when he was "making his marshals out of mud," the common clay of French peasant, that "heredity is ridiculous." He said the great revolution had longed with ridicule the old claims of descent, putting to ignominious flight the "hereditary aristocracy" on every battle-field and clapping the dunces' cap on stupid and supine kings.

Old friends remembered. Other had than Napoleon's ever lifted so great a legion of people out of obscurity into position, out of poverty into affluence. For ten years he had faced the world with a heart of ice, never ceased to take a boyish pride and pleasure in sharing his fortunes with all who had known him in his poorer days.

He hunted up the outcast friars of the overthrown school at Brienne and conferred offices and pensions on the Bournons he welcomed in even. He bestowed a salary on every old man he met who had served with him, a pension on every old man who had served with him, a pension on every old man who had served with him.

MME. RECAMIER (By David)

among the pupils at the Ecole, the youth who lent the penniless Corsican the money to take to his regiment at Valence, was in exile as an aristocrat, but was recalled and received an important office.

The newly increasing paucity of the consulate was outweighing the monarchs of royalty, and a presentation to Napoleon and Josephine was more coveted than an introduction to the Emperor, the Hohenzollerns or the Guelpins, the new court was free from the scandals and intrigues of the old court. Not only was there opened under the consulate a career for every talent, but for every ability a fair field and no favor.

Although when Napoleon went to take up his residence in the Tuileries, the "hereditary aristocracy" in the procession had to ride in street with pieces of paper pasted over his license numbers, and they were hardly a year of lively life in the city. Paris quite resumed her place as the capital of the world.

Malmaison today. Malmaison were the centers round which the new life of the nation revolved. The scene was now, only serves to recall the prosaic life of the poor and the meager life of the poor.

Memories of Josephine. The old friends remembered. Other had than Napoleon's ever lifted so great a legion of people out of obscurity into position, out of poverty into affluence.

JOSEPHINE'S DAUGHTER, HORTENSE (From a drawing by herself)

Hotel des Invalides is itself 4 feet 3 inches in length. His stature, therefore, was not far from medium according to the modern standards of Latin nations. His habit of stooping, however, with his hands behind his back and his chest made him appear shorter than he was.

Napoleon and women. Mme. de Remusat said that he was only stilled for a tent or a throne, where everything was permitted. When he spoke to a woman, his habit was to enter or leave a room, make a bow, sit down properly or converse; he could only ask abrupt questions or make impertinent comments.

A word portrait. It is certain he was not lacking in one respect: his air was already regal and his appearance had grown majestic. Much of the time until he was 40 he did not have enough to eat, but in the consulate he was no longer lean and hungry looking.

MME. TALLIEN, JOSEPHINE'S OLD FRIEND AND PRISON-MATE

Herodotus, black as a Moor, had served in the ranks as a common soldier for a dozen years. Augustus with rings on every finger, his mistress adorned with gold and decorated even with diamonds, was the son of the keeper of a fruit stall, and had been in the guard of Frederick the Great and a private in the Neapolitan army when he was 30.

Old friends remembered. Other had than Napoleon's ever lifted so great a legion of people out of obscurity into position, out of poverty into affluence. For ten years he had faced the world with a heart of ice, never ceased to take a boyish pride and pleasure in sharing his fortunes with all who had known him in his poorer days.

He hunted up the outcast friars of the overthrown school at Brienne and conferred offices and pensions on the Bournons he welcomed in even. He bestowed a salary on every old man he met who had served with him, a pension on every old man who had served with him.

NAPOLÉON'S STUDY IN THE PARK OF MALMAISON

Napoleon on his divorce. It is from a feeling of justice that I will not divorce my wife. My interests, perhaps the interests of the system demand that I should marry again. But I have said to myself, 'Why should I put away that good woman simply because I have become greater?'

leans over the chair of Hortense Beauharnais, but he glances longingly at some faintly smiling daughter, now Mme. de Lavalette, his lost love, while his betrothed, Hortense, herself, sits in the room, the fiancée whom Napoleon brought back from Egypt, ushers in her heart's desire, waiting for the marriage ceremony. The American is Eliza Monroe, daughter of a former minister from the republic of Louisiana and president of the United States.

It was not a pressing occasion that he had spent the evening at Malmaison. Nothing for wealth was showering fortunes on his family. He had installed himself in a village town and country establishments, all except Joseph's former marriage with the wealthy Julie Clary, he was enjoying the lot of the family seven and eight years before when they were literally in the "bread line" at Toulon.

Berthier, Cambaceres and Le Brun glanced up from their cards to listen to the Emperor. Everywhere were the ferret-like eyes of Fouché, the villain in the scene, always stealthily seeking out the spots in which to settle, particularly in the armor of Napoleon. He has already read aloud to the First Consul the contents of the divorce of Josephine was contemplated because she had not presented her husband with an heir, while he was waiting to laugh at it as a wild absurdity, he searched the countenance of Napoleon.

Josephine, too, has frequently been made to listen to the same disquieting suggestion. Her new position in the palace was not a very ambitious woman. If she still did not love her husband, she would not have made her love to him and to suffer the pangs of jealousy from his disloyalty.

As if it were not so, and he subdued to what it works in, a man cannot exercise a despotism without developing a despotism. He is a man, and he is a man. He is a man, and he is a man. He is a man, and he is a man.

The shadow of the throne. The net of intrigue, drawing about her day by day, grew finer and finer. Her day by day, grew finer and finer. Her day by day, grew finer and finer.

Josephine's alarm. Once Napoleon asked her to tell him his defects, and she replied that she knew only two—weakness and indelicacy. He permitted himself to be influenced by persons who are only seeking you down, and you are so fond of arguing that you let your secret thoughts escape.

An evening at Malmaison. The prospect of the empire, a tableau representing the day before the opening of the imperial dynasty when the court of republican youth bloomed into kings and queens, princes and princesses, Napoleon himself, Napoleon's wife, Josephine, and the young men and women of the consulate, were the first of the first, the first of the first, the first of the first.

SYNOPSIS.

Trine is the "death sign" employed by Morgan Trine in the private war of vengeance which, through the agency of his daughter Judith, a woman of violent passions like his own, he wages against Alan Law, son of the man (now dead) whom Trine held responsible for the accident which rendered him a hopeless cripple. Alan is in love with Rose, Judith's twin and double, but in all else her opposite. Judith vows to compass Alan's death, but under dramatic circumstances he saves her life and so unwittingly and unwillingly wins her love. Thereafter Judith is by turns worked upon by the old hatred, the new love, and jealousy of her sister Rose.

I—THE HOUSE DIVIDED.

Alone in that strange place of silence and shadow—that den of the devil's ivory, crimson and black—chained to the invalid chair wherein, day in, day out, for years on end, he had suffered the Promethean torments of the life that would not die out of his wretched, wrecked carcass, though without ceasing sharp-beaked envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness pecked insatiably at his vitals. Seneca Trine sat waiting, with the impassivity of a graven figure waiting on his imminent hour of ultimate avengement for the wrong that had made him what he was.

"Another hour! In sixty minutes more they will be here, Judith and Marrophat and Rose—poor fool!—and him! In sixty minutes more they will put him down before me, bound and helpless, if not dead."

A slight pause prefaced words that were a whimpered prayer. "God send that he be not dead! Have I lingered here in anguish all these weary years for the fulfillment of my revenge only to be cheated at the end by Death? God grant that Alan Law may be laid down still living here at my feet! Then . . ."

A bitter smile twisted his tortured features. "Then shall my will be done to him! And then, when I have seen him die as his father did—then—Ah, God!—then at last I too may die! . . ."

There was a long silence, then a groan of exasperated protest. "Why do they not come? Why does Judith delay, when she knows how I suffer? Why have I been put off from day to day with her telegrams that begged for more time and promised everything—but told nothing!—until yesterday. Where are those messages she sent me yesterday?"

His one sound hand groped out like a claw and sought a mass of papers on the desk beside him, sorting out from among them two yellow forms. Painfully he blinked over these and slowly his pale lips coned their wording.

"Alan and Rose safe with me—will bring both home tomorrow night without fail," he read the first aloud, and then the second. "Have motor-car waiting for me tomorrow morning from three o'clock till called for New Bedford waterfront—Judith."

"No!" he affirmed with the fervor of one persuaded by his own desires. "I must not doubt the girl! She has promised, she has performed . . . So still was he, indeed, that he seemed to sleep, but so deceptive was that semblance that he was alert for the least sound. The girl entered softly, as if fearful of disturbing his slumbers, but she found him with head erect and eyes a blaze.

"Judith!" he cried, his great voice vibrating like a brazen bell. "At last! Where is he? You have brought him? Where is he?"

With no more answer than a sigh, the girl drooped her head and let her hands hang limply with palms exposed.

After an instant of incredulous disappointment the man shot a single, frigid question at her: "You have failed?"

"I have failed," she confessed.

"Why?" She shrugged slightly. "Who knows why one fails? I did my best, he was too much for me, outwitted me at every turn. Time and again I thought I had him, but always he escaped either by his own wit and courage or with another's aid. Only yesterday night they were all three in the hollow of my hands—but now I bring you only Rose."

She faltered, awed by the glare of his infuriated eyes. "Let me explain," she begged.

He snapped her short. "You cannot explain. The thing is impossible, that you should have failed. There is something beneath this, something you will not tell me."

His hand sought the row of buttons on the desk and pressed one long.

"Almost instantly a servant gilded noiselessly into the room.

"My daughter Rose—have her brought here to me at once!"

In another moment the replica of his daughter Judith was ushered into his presence.

Upon this one he loosed the lightning of his wrath without ruth.

Rose suffered him in silence. His most galling reprimand edged no return from this one. In a lull in Trine's tirade, Judith chose to interject: "Don't be so hard on the silly fool she's not responsible, she's sick with love for that good-looking simpleton!"

with the daughter who had been estranged from him since birth by every instinct of her nature, essayed in vain to break down her mutinous silence.

At last Trine summoned two of his creatures and had her led weeping from the room to be held prisoner in her bedchamber on the topmost floor of the house.

II—A SPORTING OFFER.

Some two hours later, that same evening, Mr. Alan Law, very much alive and, in spite of a complete new outfit of ready-made clothing, looking much more like himself than he had in a fortnight, issued forth from the Grand Central station, hailed a taxicab, and had himself conveyed to the Hotel Monolith.

But if he looked his proper self once more, it speedily was demonstrated that his wish was otherwise, for after learning from the room-clerk of the Monolith that a suite was being held in the name of Arthur Lawrence, that was the name Mr. Law inscribed on the register.

On the other hand, it was his true name that he gave to the person whom he called upon the telephone immediately after being shown to his rooms.

Alan's Appearance at the Hotel Monolith Created a Stir.

But then he was speaking to his old friend and man of business Mr. Digby.

Within another ten minutes this last was in conference with his employer.

"I think you must be out of your head," Digby insisted nervously, once their first greetings were over. "You might just as sensibly throw yourself from the top of the Metropolitan tower as come to New York while Trine lives and knows you're this side the water."

"Nonsense!" Alan laughed. "Remember this is New York—not the backwoods of Maine!"

Alan paused and smote his palm with a remorseful fist. "By the Eternal, I'm forgetting Barcus!"

"Barcus?"

"Chap whose boat I chartered in Portland—sheer luck on my part, he's one of the salt of the earth. First, something must be done for the boy. You've got influence of some sort in New Bedford, surely?"

Digby reflected. "Some. There's George Blaine, justice of the peace."

"The very man. Telegraph him in Barcus' interests immediately. And telegraph Barcus as well—send him a hundred for expenses and tell him to join me here in New York as quick as he can!"

"Your friend's address?" Digby inquired, mildly ironic as he sat down at the desk and fumbled with the supply of stationery.

"New Bedford jail, of course!" Alan chuckled—but cut his laugh in two as something fluttered from the pack of envelopes which Digby had his turbed and fell to the floor between the two men.

Face up, it grinned sardonic mockery of Alan's confidence. It was a Trey of Hearts.

With an ashen face and a trembling hand, Digby stooped to pick the damned thing up, but Alan was beforehand with him, and got his fingers first upon the card.

"Now will you believe?" Digby demanded huskily.

"In what? A simple coincidence?" Alan flouted.

"Not I! Who knows I'm in New York—or that the Arthur Lawrence for whom your agent engaged these rooms was Alan Law? No, my friend, it's a bit too thick for me. Take my word for it, this is nothing more nor less than a souvenir of a poker-party held by yesterday's tenant of this suite!"

Perhaps—perhaps!—Digby assented, stroking tremulous lips. But I'm afraid for you, my boy. Who knows that Trine's spies were not watching my man when he made this reservation? Who knows but that 'Arthur Lawrence' was too thin a disguise for Alan Law? I tell you, I'm frightened at the marrow of my old bones! Do me this favor at least, my boy, now that you've been warned, whether by accident or design—we won't argue that—do leave town—go incognito to some quiet place near by and wait there for the sailing of the next transatlantic steamer. Oh, surely you can't deny me this one wish of my fond old heart, my boy!"

"It shall be done," Digby promised. "It must!"

"You believe that?"

"In twelve hours Rose shall be restored to you!"

"Will you make a book on it? I'll bet you something handsome—and hope I lose into the bargain if you believe you can carry out your promise, wire the White Star line to reserve the best available suite on the Oceanic, sailing tomorrow morning at ten—and make arrangements for a marriage before the boat sails!"

"I'll go you," Digby agreed: "and if I fail, I forfeit the cost of the reservation. But about this marriage—"

He hesitated.

"You'll have to have a license in this state—and can't get one except by applying in person with your bride-to-be. There won't be time—"

"Then we'll marry in Jersey!" Alan insisted. "Dig up some clergyman over there, if you don't know one yourself—"

"Oh, I'm well acquainted with the very man!"

III—THE TIME 'O NIGHT.

Not displeased to be left to his own devices (whose proposed character Digby would never have approved had he so much as suspected them) Alan the woman Rose or Judith? That she was one of these he could plainly see. But which? Dared he assume his hopes fulfilled?

With difficulty he detached his hungry vision from her, and drawing from his pocket a small notebook, tore out a blank page, placed this flat on the girder, found a pencil, and with the assistance of a ray or two of moonlight scrawled a message of almost stenographic brevity.

When he looked up from this task, she had vanished.

Sitting up, astride the girder, he took his watch—a cheap affair he had picked up when reclothing himself in the garments of civilized society, at Providence, that morning—opened the back of the case, and closed it upon the folded message.

Then drawing back his arm, he breathed a silent prayer to the god of all true lovers, and cast it from him with all his might—with such force that it almost unseated him at the end of the swing. But nothing less would have served to bridge that yawning chasm.

And the watch flew straight and true, squarely through the lighted window and to the further wall.

In that very instant of his exultation over an obstacle overcome, he heard a sound behind him of heavy breathing.

The assassin had come that close upon his prey when Alan turned and discovered his peril.

The same moonbeam which had aided Alan in the composition of his message struck across the other's face, and showed it like a hideous Chinese mask of deadly hatred, with its eyeballs glaring and its lips drawn back from the naked blade gripped between its teeth—stiletto nothing short of a foot in length.

With a sharp, startled movement, Alan swung himself bodily about, so that, seated again astride the girder, he faced the assassin, who sat up, straddling the girder, his feet hooked beneath it, and the stiletto poised in a lifted hand.

But even now Alan was in little or no better case than before. If he faced the thug, he faced him with no arms other than his bare hands. He had not even a penknife in his pockets.

With a low cry of desperation he snatched off his hat, a soft and shapeless felt affair, and flung it squarely in the fellow's face.

Before he could recover—before, that is, it dropped away and cleared his vision, Alan had bent forward and grasped the wrist of the hand that held the knife.

He snatched simultaneously at the other hand, but it eluded him.

Immediately the two became engaged in a furious contest for possession of the stiletto.

Alan had this advantage as long as the knife might not strike—that his right arm was free, while the assassin had only his left. With this he strove persistently to reach his knife-hand and possess himself of the weapon. As persistently Alan foiled his purpose by dragging the knife-hand toward him and swinging it far out to one side.

At the same time he struck repeatedly with his clenched fist at the other's face. His blows did little damage beyond disconcerting the other but this proved a very considerable factor in the duel. In the end, they served together with that steady, restlessly downward and outward drag, to break the grip of the man's locked legs.

Abruptly he pitched forward on his face along the girder, kicking wildly, grasping at the air. The stiletto fell from an instinctively relaxed grasp, and disappeared. And before Alan could release his hold, or ease the strain upon the right arm of the assassin, this last had slipped bodily from the girder and hung helpless in space, dangling at the end of Alan's arm—within no more than the grip of five fingers between him and death.

The shock of that unpressed turn brought Alan forward and flat on his stomach. And the strain on his left arm was terrific. He doubted if he could maintain it for another minute. Nor was there any reason why he should retain it. The end he had designed for his victim was merely his just deserts.

And yet Alan could not let him go.

Thus the battle began anew—but now it was a battle with a man half-crazed with fright and struggling so madly that he well-nigh frustrated the efforts of his rescuer.

In the upshot the assassin lay like a limp rag across the girder, head and arms dangling on one side, legs and feet on the other, spent with his terrific exertions and physically sick with terror.

And in this state Alan left him, he had done enough to let the man shift for himself from this time on.

IV—CHANGELING.

In the vague, chill gray of that dull and desolate dawn, Judith stirred abruptly on the couch of a sleepless night, and with the rapidity of one who has arrived at a settled purpose after a long period of doubt and perplexity, rose and bathed and dressed herself in negligence.

In the adjoining room she could hear small, stealthy noises—the sounds made by her sister moving about and preparing against the unguessable moment when her rescue would be attempted, according to the information conveyed in that midnight message.

For chance had conspired with her insomnia to station Judith in the recess of her darkened window, idly viewing the gaunt framework of the unfinished building from an angle which, when Alan edged out along the girder, showed him plainly in silhouette against the sky.

In Judith's eyes his identity was unmistakable. She had seen him throw the watch and had heard the double thump of its impact with the wall and floor of Rose's bedchamber.

And she had witnessed with wildly beating heart that duel in the air—able to surmise its outcome only from the fact that the victor spared the life of the vanquished.

The clock was striking six as she left her room: across the street workmen were streaming into the build ag to begin the labors of the day.

Brushing unceremoniously past the drowsy and indifferent guard in the corridor outside the door to Rose's room, Judith turned the key that remained in the lock on the outside, removed it, entered, and locked the door behind her.

Without any surprise she found her sister already dressed to the point of donning her outer garments.

Rendered half frantic by this unexpected interruption, threatening as it did the perilous scheme that Alan had proposed, Rose greeted her sister with a countenance at once aghast and wrathful.

"I insist that you leave this room at once!"

"Insist by all means—and be damned! I may leave this room—and I may not, dear little sister. But one of us will never leave it alive!"

With a start of terror Rose shrank back from this strange, wild thing that wore the very shape and semblance of herself.

"What do you mean? You cannot mean to murder me in cold blood, Judith?"

"Not I!" Judith laughed harshly. "But, since it has pleased Destiny to decree that we must both love one man—let Destiny decide between us and bear the blame of murder!"

"Judith!"

"One moment!" Crossing to a side table, Judith took up a glass from a tray that held a silver water-pitcher, and returned with it to the table that occupied the middle of the floor. At the same time she opened her hand till then fast clenched and disclosed a small blue bottle with a red label shrieking through a hole in the glass, "POISON!"

"Strychnine," she explained composedly, "in solution." And emptied the bottle into the glass.

A measure of courage returned to Rose. "Do you expect to be able to make me drink that?" she demanded contemptuously.

"Not I—but Destiny, if it will!" See here! From a pocket of her dressing-gown Judith produced a sealed deck of playing cards. "Let these declare the will of Destiny toward us. I will break the seal, shuffle the cards, and deal," she explained, suiting action to word. "The one who gets the Trey of Hearts will drain that glass. Is it a bargain?"

"Never! Oh, now I know that you are altogether mad!"

Whipping a small revolver from another pocket of her dressing-gown, Judith placed it on the table, ready to her hand.

"You will shoot me if I do not consent?"

"Not you—but him. If you refuse, little sister, I will shoot Alan Law dead when he comes to keep his appointment with you."

With a shudder Rose bowed her head.

"Deal," she muttered fearfully, "and may God judge between us!"

One by one she stripped the cards from the top of the deck, dealing first to Rose, then to herself. The Trey of Hearts fell to Judith.

There was an instant of silent dread, ended by Rose, as Judith's hand moved steadily toward the glass.

"Judith!" she implored. "Don't—I beg of you—I didn't mean it—I take back my consent—"

"Too late!" said Judith, lifting the glass and eyeing its contents with a strange smile.

none the less deferred action until after midnight.

And espionage was all he feared—save and except always, of course, failure to find his Rose.

It was about one in the morning when he arrived inconspicuously (but not so much so as to seem deserving of police surveillance) in the neighborhood of the Riverside drive home of his mortal enemy, a grim white house that towered, stark and tall, upon a corner.

His preliminary reconnaissance provided little more than comfortless exercise. Huge still, its walls bathed in the milk and ink of moonlight and shadow, all its windows dark but one—and that one, in the topmost tier, showed only a feeble glimmer, so slight that Alan almost overlooked it.

But once discovered, it focused upon itself his thoughts with a power little less than hypnotic.

He belloyed with small doubt that Rose was a prisoner within those walls, that Judith must have conveyed her there with all speed.

And, this being the presumptive case, that small, high window of the light might well be hers.

Directly across the street from the Trine residence, on the opposite corner, a colossal apartment structure stood half finished, stonework to its second story, gaunt iron skeleton rearing above.

To his infinite disgust, Alan found the guardian very wide awake, very much on the job, no chance here to steal unseen into the building.

This in itself might have been deemed a suspicious circumstance, not for nothing does an honest night watchman so deny the laws of nature and the tenets of his craft. But Alan merely praised the man while cursing the very fact of his existence, and, according, overcame with bank notes what seemed an uncommonly stubborn reluctance, and got his way.

He could not know that another skulked behind a barrier of lime barrels and overhead all that passed and, when Alan had ducked smartly into the unfinished building, rose and stole after him with footsteps as noiseless as a cat's and a face that had the savagery of a tiger's when it was wretchedly relieved in a shaft of moonlight.

At length Alan gained the gridiron of girders on a plane with the lighted window across the way, and crept along one of these, gingerly on his hands and knees, until he came to its end and might, if he cared to, look down a hundred feet to the sidewalks.

That view, however, did not tempt, he kept his eyes level; and was rewarded with a bare glimpse of a prettily-papered wall, framed in the lace of half-drawn curtains.

FIVE days after leaving us, the launch, with one of the native trading boats lashed alongside, returned. On January 13 we broke camp, loaded ourselves and all our belongings on the launch and the houseboat, and started up-stream for Tapirapoa. All about us were about thirty men, with five dogs, and tents, bedding and provisions; fresh beef, growing rapidly less fresh; skins—all and everything jammed together.

It rained most of the first day and part of the first night. After that the weather was generally overcast and pleasant for traveling; but sometimes rain and torrid sunshine alternated.

The cooking—and it was good cooking—was done in a tiny little open-air fireplace, with two or three cooking pots placed at the stern of the houseboat. The fireplace was a platform of earth, taken from ant-hills, and heaped and spread over the base of the boat. Around it the dusky cook worked with philosophic solemnity in rain and shine.

Our attendants, friendly souls with skins of every shade and hue, slept most of the time on the bank, on boxes, bundles and slabs of beef. An enormous land turtle was tethered toward the bow of the houseboat. When the men slept too near it, it made futile efforts to scramble over the top and return now and then one of them gravely used it for a seat.

Slowly the throbbing engine drove the launch and its weirdly side partner against the swift current. The river had risen about a mile and a half an hour. Ahead of us the brown water street stretched in curves between endless walls of dense tropical forest.

A riot of vegetation.

It was like passing through a gigantic greenhouse. Wawasa and borit palms, cecropias, huge figs, feathery bamboos, strange yellow-stemmed trees, low trees with enormous leaves, tall trees with delicate as delicate as lace, trees with buttressed trunks, trees with boles rising smooth and straight to lofty heights, all woven together by a tangle of vines, crowded down to the edge of the river. Their drooping branches, like curtains of water, forming a screen through which it was impossible to see the bank, and exceedingly difficult to penetrate to the bank. Rarely one of them showed flowers—large white blossoms, or small red or yellow blossoms, more often the lilac flowers of the begonia vine made large patches of color. Innumerable epiphytes covered the limbs and crevices, grew on the roughened trunks.

A little bird life—a darter now and then, and kingfishers flitting from perch to perch. At long intervals we passed a ranch. At one the large, red-tiled, whitewashed house stood on a grassy slope, behind mango trees. The wooden shanty was a delight as delicate as lace. The big windows and the big rooms were utterly bare—not a book, not an ornament. A palm, loaded with scores of the pendulous nests of the tropicbirds, stood near the door. Behind were orange trees and bananas, rice and tobacco.

The tall foreman was courteous and hospitable. His dark-skinned womenfolk kept in the furtive background. Like most of the ranches, this was owned by a company with headquarters at Caacera.

The trip was pleasant and interesting, although there was not much to do on the boat. It was too crowded to move around and to get any of the purpose.

We enjoyed the scenery; we talked in English, Portuguese, bad French, and broken German. Some of us wrote. Fiala made sketches of improved tents, hammocks, and other equipment suggested what he had already seen. Some of us read books. Col. Rondan, neat, trim, alert and soldierly, studied a standard work on applied geographical astronomy. Father Zahne read a novel by Fogazzaro, and a couple of Brazilian novels, "O Guarani" and "Inocencia." My own reading varied from "Quentin Durward" and "Gibson" to the "Chanson de Roland." Miller took his rifle and pet owl, Moses, and gave him food and water. Moses crooned and chucked gratefully when he was stroked and tickled.

At a primitive ranch.

Late the first evening we moored to the bank by a little fazenda of the poorer type. The houses were of palm leaves. Even the walls were made of the wawasa palm, stuck upright in the ground and the blades plaited together.

Some of us went ashore. Some stayed on the boats. There were no mosquitoes, the weather was not oppressively hot and we slept well. By 5 o'clock next morning we had each drunk a cup of delicious Brazilian coffee, and the boats were under way.

All day we steamed slowly up-stream. We passed two or three fazendas. At one the trees were overgrown with pretty little yellow orchids. At dark we moored at a spot where there were no branches to prevent our placing the boats directly alongside the bank. There were hardly any mosquitoes. Most of the party took their hammocks ashore, and the camp was pitched amid singularly beautiful surroundings.

The trees were wawasa palms, some with the fronds cresting very tall, trunks, some with the fronds seemingly longer—rising almost from the ground. The fronds were of great length, some could not have been less than 8 feet long. Bushes and grass, dew-drenched and glittering with the green of emeralds, grew in the open spaces between.

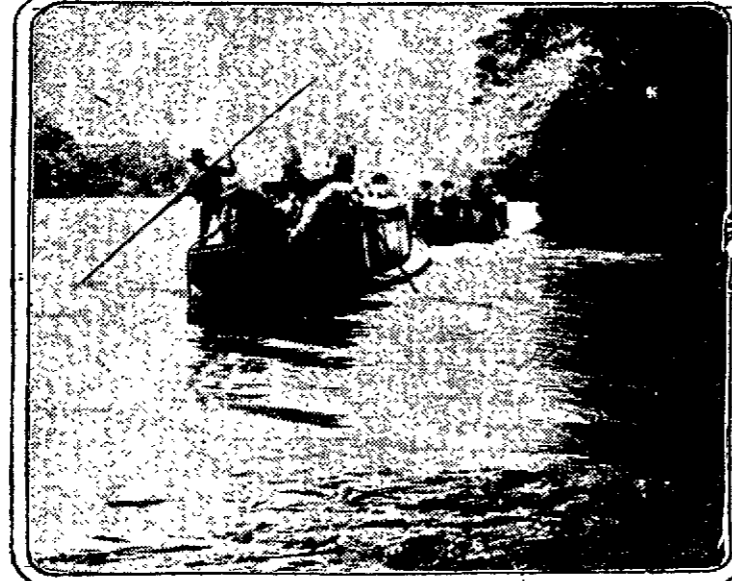

We left at sunrise the following morning. One of the sailors had straggled inland. He got turned round and could not find the river, and we started before discovering his absence. We stopped at once, and with much difficulty he forced his way through the fine-lined and thorn-guarded jungle toward the sound of the launch's engine and of the bugle which was blown in this dense jungle, when the sun is behind clouds, a man without a compass who strays a hundred yards from the river may readily become hopelessly lost.

A Land of Palms.

As we ascended the river the wawasa palms became constantly more numerous. At this point for many miles they gave their own character to the forest on the river banks. Everywhere their long, curving fronds rose among the other trees, and in places their lofty trunks made them hold their heads higher than the other trees. But they were never as tall as the giants among the ordinary trees.

On one towering palm we noticed a mass of beautiful violet orchids growing from the side of the trunk half-way to the top. On another big tree, not a lamp, which stood in a little opening, there hung well over a hundred troupias' nests. Besides two or three small ranches we saw day by day a large ranch. The various houses and sheds, all palm-thatched, stood by the river in a big space of cleared ground, dotted with wawasa palms.

A native houseboat was moored by the bank. Women and children looked from the unglazed windows of the houses; men stood in front of them. The biggest house was inclosed by a stockade of palm logs, thrust end-on into the ground. Cows and oxen grazed round about, and carts with iron wheels, each wheel made of a single disk of wood, were tilted on their poles.

We made our noonday halt on an island where very tall trees grew bearing fruits that were pleasant to the taste. Other trees on the island were covered with rich red and yellow blossoms; and masses of delicate blue flowers and of star-shaped white flowers were scattered about. Hither and thither across the surface of the river flew swallows, with so much white in their plumage that as they flashed in the sun they seemed to have snow on their wings and tails. The current of the river grew swifter, there were stretches of broken water that were almost rapids, the laboring engine strained and sobbed as with increasing rapidity it urged forward the launch and her clumsy consort.

At nightfall we moored beside the bank, where the forest was open enough to permit a comfortable camp. That night the ants ate large holes in the party's mosquito netting, and almost devoured his socks and shoe laces.

At sunrise we again started. There were occasional stretches of swift, broken water, almost rapids, in the river; everywhere the current was swift, and our progress was slow. The prancha was towed at the end of a hawser, and her crew pulled. Even thus we only just made the river in more than one day.

at will. There were two, or three wagons and carts, and a traction automobile, used in the construction of the telegraph line, but not available in the rainy season, at the time of our trip.

Here we were to begin our trip overland, on pack-mules and pack-oxen, scores of which had been gathered to meet us. Several days were needed to apportion the loads and arrange for the several divisions in which it was necessary that so large a party should attempt the long wilderness march, through a country where there was not much food for man or beast, and where it was always possible to run into a district in which fatal cattle or horse diseases were prevalent. Fiala, with his usual efficiency, took charge of handling the outfit of the American portion of the expedition, with Sigg as an active and useful assistant. Harper, who, like the others, worked with whole-hearted zeal and cheerfulness, also helped him, except when he engaged in help with the naturalists. The two latter, Cherie and Miller, had so far done the hardest and the best work of the expedition. They had collected about a thousand birds and two hundred and fifty mammals.

It was not probable that they would do as well during the remainder of our trip, for we intended thenceforth to halt as little, and march as steadily, as the country, the weather and the condition of our means of transportation permitted. I kept continually wishing that they had more time in which to study the absorbingly interesting life histories of the beautiful and wonderful birds and beasts we were all the time seeing.

Every first-rate museum must still employ competent collectors; but I think that a museum could now confer most lasting benefit, and could do work of most permanent good, by sending out into the immense wilderness, where wild nature is at her best, trained observers with the gift of recording what they have observed. Such men should be collectors, for collecting is still necessary, but they should also, and indeed primarily, be able themselves to see and to get vividly before the eyes of others the full life histories of the creatures that dwell in the waste spaces of the world.

At this point both Cherie and Miller collected a number of mammals and birds which they had not previously obtained; whether any were new to science could only be determined after the specimens reached the American museum.

Formidable Ant Armies.

While making the round of his small mammal traps one morning, Miller encountered an army of the formidable foraging ants. The species was a large black one, moving with a wall-worm fashion. These ants, sometimes called army ants, like the driver ants of Africa, move in big bodies and destroy or make prey of every living thing that crosses their path in time. They run fast and everything runs away from their advance. Insects form their chief prey, and the most dangerous and aggressive lower-life creatures make astonishingly little resistance to them.

Miller's attention was first attracted to this army of ants by noticing a big centiped, nine or ten inches long, trying to flee before them. A number of the ants were biting it, and at each bite, but did not try to use its long-curved jaws against its assailants. On other occasions he saw big scorpions and big hairy spiders trying to escape in the same way, and showing the same helpless inability to injure their ravenous foes, or to defend themselves. The ants climb trees to a great height, much higher than most birds' nests, and at once kill and tear to pieces any fledglings in the nests they catch. But they are not as common as some writers seem to imagine; days may elapse before their armies are encountered, and doubtless most nests are never visited or threatened by them. In some instances it seems likely that the birds save themselves and their young in other ways. Some nests are inaccessible. From others it is probable that the parents remove the young. Miller once, in Ghana, had been watching for some days a nest of ant-wrens which contained young. Going thither one morning, he found the tree, and the nest itself, swarming with foraging ants. He at first thought that the fledglings had been devoured, but he soon saw the parents, only about thirty yards off, with food in their beaks. They were engaged in entering a dense part of the jungle, coming out again with food in their beaks, and soon reappearing once more with food. Miller never found their new nests, but their actions left him certain that they were feeding their young, which they must have, themselves removed, from the old nest.

These ant-wrens hover in front of and over the columns of foraging ants, feeding not only on the other insects aroused by the ants, but on the ants themselves. This fact has been doubted; but Miller has shot them with the ants in their bills and in their stomachs. Dragonflies, in numbers, often hover over the columns, darting down at them; Miller could not be certain he had seen them actually seizing the ants, but this was his belief.

I have myself seen these ants plunder a nest of the dangerous and highly aggressive wasps, while the wasps buzzed about in great excitement, but seemed unable effectively to retaliate. I have also seen them clear a sapling tenanted by their kinsmen, the poisonous red ants, or fire-ants; the fire-ants fought and I have no doubt injured or killed some of their swarming and active black foes; but the latter quickly did away with them. I have only come across black foraging ants; but there are a red species. They attack human beings precisely as they attack all animals and precipitate flight is the only resort.

Around our camp here butterflies of gorgeous coloring swarmed and there were many fungi as delicately shaped and tinted as flowers. The scents in the woods were wonderful. There were many whippo-will's, or rather Brazilian birds related to them; they uttered at intervals through the night a succession of notes suggesting those of our whippo-will's-widow of the gulf states, but not identical with either. There were other birds which were nearly akin to familiar birds of the United States; a dull-colored catbird, a dull-colored robin, and a sparrow, longing to the genus as our common song-sparrow and sweetheart sparrow. Miller had heard this sparrow singing by day and night, 14,000 feet up on the Andes, and its song suggested the songs of both of our sparrows.

There were doves and woodpeckers of various species. Other birds bore no resemblance to any of ours. One honey-creeper was a perfect little robin, with plumage that was black, purple and turquoise, and brilliant scarlet feet.

Two of the birds which Cherie and Miller procured were of extraordinary nesting habits. One a nunlet, in shape resembles a short-tailed bluebird. It is plumbeous, with a fulvous belly and white tail coverts. It is a stupid little bird, and does not like to fly away even when shot at. It catches its prey and ordinarily acts like a rather dull flycatcher, perching on some dead tree, swooping on insects and then returning to its perch, and never going on the ground to feed or run about. But its nests in burrows which it digs itself; one bird usually digs the hole, while the other bird perches on a bush near by. Sometimes those burrows are in the side of a sandbank, the sand being so loose that it is a marvel that it does not cave in. Sometimes the burrows are in the level plain, running down about three feet, and then rising at an angle. The nest consists of a few leaves and grasses, and the eggs are white.

The other bird, called a nun or wax-bill, is about the size of a thrush, grayish in color, with a waxy red bill. It also burrows in the level soil, the burrows being five feet long; and over the mouth of the burrow it heaps a pile of sticks and leaves.

At this camp the heat was greater—from 91 degrees to 104 degrees Fahrenheit—and the air very heavy, being saturated with moisture, and there were many rainstorms. But there were no mosquitoes, and we were very comfortable.

Thanks to the neighborhood of the ranch, we faced sumptuously, with plenty of hot chicken and fresh milk. Two of the Brazilian dishes were delicious: canna, a thick soup of chicken and rice, the best soup a hungry man ever tasted; and beef chopped in rather small slices, and served with a well-flavored but simple gravy.

The mule allotted me as a riding beast was a powerful animal, with easy gait. The Brazilian government had waiting for me a magnificent silver-mounted saddle and bridle; I was very much pleased with both. However, my exceedingly rough and shabby clothing made an incongruous contrast.

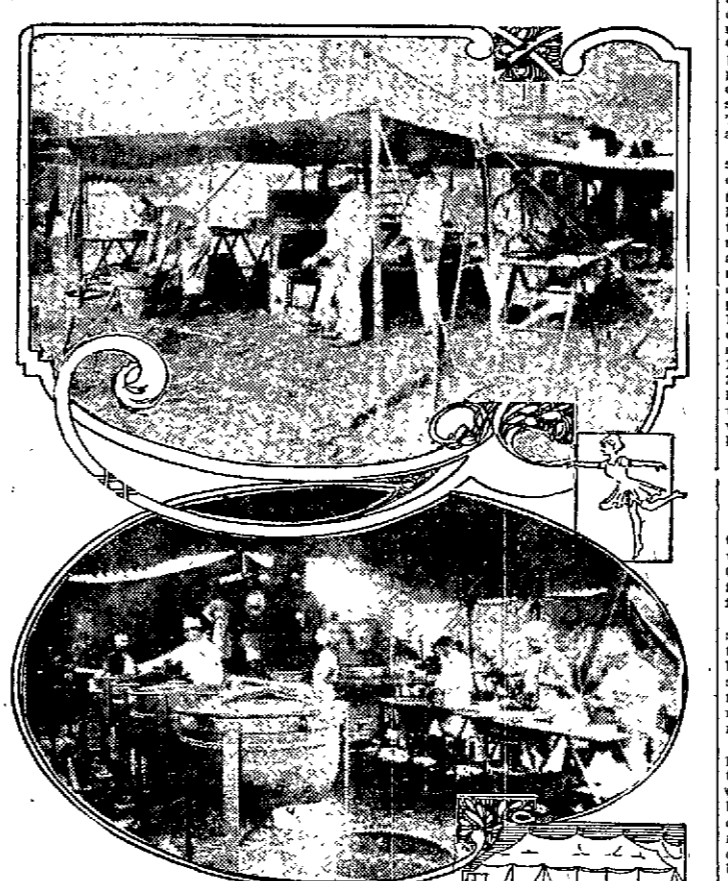

At Tapirapoa we broke up our baggage—as well as our party. We sent forward, to the divide between the Gyrcandian ranges—which, with the motor engine and some kerosene, went in a cart drawn by six oxen—and a hundred sealed tin cases of provisions, each containing a ration of food for six men. They had been put up in New York under the special direction of Fiala, for use when we got where we wished to take good and varied food in small compass.

All that we had of skulls and alcohol specimens, and all the baggage not absolutely necessary, were sent back down the Paraguay and to New York, in charge of Harper. Most of the baggage, however, was sent under the charge of Captain Amlicar, who was organized to go in one detachment.

The main body of the expedition, consisting of the remaining Americans, members of the Gyrcandian division, Lieutenant Lyra and Dr. Cajassias, with their baggage and provisions, formed another detachment.

In the next article Colonel Roosevelt will tell of his experience in the country of the blood-sucking vampire bats and of the northward journey into the highest wilderness of Brazil.

WOMEN FILL THE JOBS WHEN MEN GO TO FRONT

Daughters of Great Britain Eager to Be of Service During the War.

London, October 3.—Remarkable testimony to the eagerness with which women want to fill the places of men who have been called away from England to fight for their country is given by the Women's Emergency Corps, which under leadership of the Duchess of Marlborough has compiled a register of upwards of 15,000 names of women, who desire to be of service.

"How diverse the jobs they seek," says Mrs. Flora Annie Steel, in writing of the work of the Women's Emergency Corps. "They may be guessed by the entries of over 100 professions—none of whom speak less than four languages, and some of them eleven—of more than an expert horsewoman ready at a few hours' notice to serve at home or abroad, and who are quite capable of managing or working in remote camps. Many of these women are of the first rank over the world, are eminently suited for rough work. There are 150 expert motorcyclists and endless staid young women for such jobs as omnibus conducting, milk delivering, gardening and the like, all of them generally done by lads of nineteen or twenty."

Of course, behind and beyond these more or less freak volunteers comes the great army of nurses, domestic workers, clerical assistants, and the versatile self-educated intelligent women, who are fully capable of shop and general business work. Naturally, the authorities have looked for the best of the men, and are in a position to register points to the fact that we have here a mighty agent for the national good.

"And so the Women's Emergency Corps feels itself justified in making an offer to the war office, the government and the public, that they will, namely, that they are prepared to find a paid substitute for any man who wishes to follow suit, but every day's register points to the fact that the national good is served by their service."

"This is a big offer; it is one which naturally will require adjustment to each individual case, but it is one which holds enormous advantages, enormous possibilities."

Wants Big Naval Fight.

(From The Pittsburgh Dispatch.)

A correspondent who wants to see the war wheels go round on sea as well as on land demands that "if the German vessels will not come out and fight let the British vessels go in and fight."

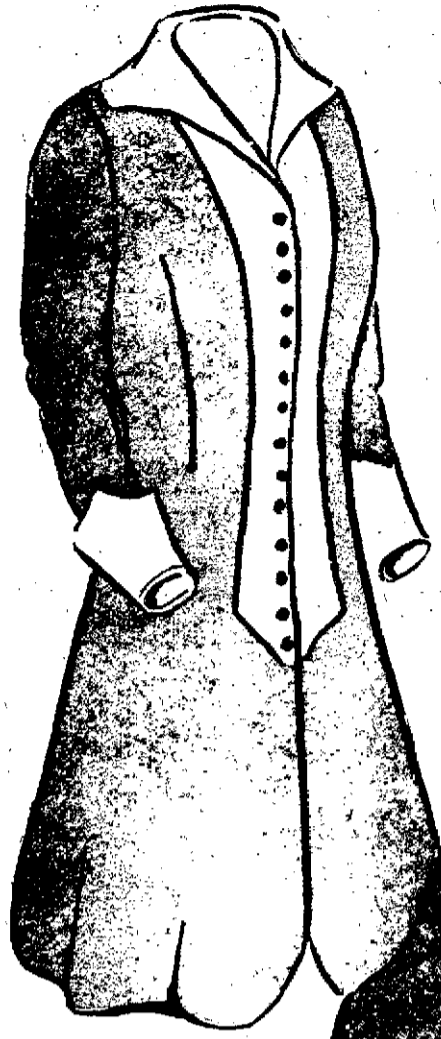

This assumes that the German vessels are keeping under cover, of which there is no authentic information. No body in creation knows the exact position of the British and German war fleets except the British and the German governments and their naval commanders.

It may be restated in regard to a part of the navies of the two countries, that part which will do the heaviest fighting in the event of a great naval battle, that Great Britain has twenty dreadnaughts to thirteen of the Germans; fighting vessels previous to the dreadnaughts, twenty-two to twelve battle cruisers, four to three; armored cruisers, fifteen to four.

Thus the fighting capacity of these classes of marine warfare shows the British to be double the strength of the German. Moreover, the British have at least ten vessels in commission which carry guns of 13.5-inch caliber, while the largest of the German vessels are of 12-inch caliber.

Possibly, just possibly, this is a consideration which has given rise to a comment that Germany is pursuing on the seas a policy of "watchful waiting."

Fashion Decrees The Redingote

The redingote on the figure illustrated is in a new brown, neither orange nor red, but something in between. Its long severe semi-fitted lines are somewhat relieved by the application of pleated side tunics. It may be worn with or without the wide Roman-stripe sash.

AND that her decrees in this as in most other instances, are promptly obeyed by the American woman, is apparent on all sides. For it is already well launched—this vogue of the redingote—and because it lends itself to an infinite variety of adaptation, is likely to stay with us for some time.
