WELCHONCE'S TRIPLE WINS GAME

POLICE HUNT PRINCIPALS IN EXPOSE

Search Records of Guests for the Leaders of System Named by Girl Victim.

A general rounding up of hotel registers by detectives for the identification of notorious men and women added the latest sensation in the vice investigation instituted following the startling disclosures of Hattie Smith, the pretty 17-year-old girl, who claims to be the victim of the "system."

The first move was made Tuesday morning when the manager of the Cumberland Hotel was subpenaed to appear in Police Court with his register that afternoon. The register will be examined by the Smith girl to identify the names of men and women who, she claims, frequent the hotel.

Detectives say they will examine every hotel register figuring in this latest expose to identify the names of parties involved. In each case the register will be searched carefully and the name of every person noted as to character and general reputation.

Get Evidence for Court.

Such evidence as may be found will be presented before Recorder Broyles, together with the cases which are made out against hotel managers and other parties.

Two other cases in connection with the investigation into the Cumberland Hotel scandal will be made out Tuesday afternoon, according to information at police headquarters.

The Smith girl has not only laid bare to the police every detail of the "system," but she has told the whole story of her own misfortune.

Tuesday morning she was visited by her father, to whom she told everything—how she, dissatisfied, left home last Wednesday; how she went to a downtown hotel; how next day she met the alleged woman procurer, who enticed her to the Hotel Cumberland, she says, and all that followed. Then the girl broke down and cried.

Girl Begs to Go Home.

"I want to go back home," said the girl between her sobs. "Will you take me back?" to which the father nodded an eager assent.

The Smith girl repeated her story with many additional details of the "system" which is said to be the most completely organized in the history of Atlanta.

Taking a lesson from her own harrowing experience, she has issued a warning to young girls to beware of the women procurers, who, she says, ply the streets with pleasant smiles and entice girls to well-known hotels of the downtown district, where the "system" is so completely organized that there is never a chance of detection or escape for the unfortunate victim.

No Chance to Escape.

"It is terrible," the Smith girl told Chief Beavers. "You should have your men turn their attention to the downtown hotels, where the 'system is organized so completely that there is no chance of turning away from wrong, once a girl gets there.

"The woman procurer who took me in charge—and she is just like scores of others who walk the streets every day—met me Thursday in a soft drink stand at the corner of Jones and Cone Streets. I told her that I didn't want to go home again, and she replied that she would get me a nice room in the Cumberland Hotel, where I would not be bothered.

"'I will give you a new name, too,' said the woman. 'I will call you Lucile Evans. Now, isn't that a nice name?'

"The woman also suggested that she go and register for me, as the appearance of two women would excite suspicion. To all of this I agreed; it was so easy, you know—nothing to do but get fixed."

The men demand more money and reorganization of working conditions.

Verdi Symphony Is Found With Rubbish

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

Atlanta Elks Begin Two-year Fight for Grand Lodge in '16

ROCHESTER, July 8.—Atlanta lost to Denver to-day for the 1914 annual convention of Grand Lodge of Elks. Delegates from Atlanta withdrew their city when it became apparent a majority of the delegates favored Denver. However, Atlanta will push its claims determinedly the next two years for the 1916 convention. The meeting in 1915 will probably go to San Francisco.

Exalted Ruler R A. Gordon, of Atlanta, this afternoon said: "We want the Elks and we want them badly in 1916."

Officers will be elected late to-day.

Tax Collections Disprove Money Is 'Tight' in Atlanta

Members of the Council Tax Committee deny there is any money stringency in Atlanta. They insist 1913 is a better business year than 1912 and cite a report of tax collections showing an increase of $116,554.71 over 1912.

Total of taxes collected in 1912 was $584,029.80. This year the total is $700,584.51.

"This year taxpayers are taking advantage of the discount more than ever," said Chairman Charles W. Smith.

Father Slain by Son In Duel With Pistols

ANDERSON, S. C., July 12.—John Dobson, a white tenant on the Pelzer farm, near Pendleton, was killed by his son in a pistol duel to-day.

The elder Dobson and his wife quarreled late yesterday. He left home, but returned early to-day with a pistol in his hand. The son opened fire on Dobson, four shots taking effect and one missing. Dobson returned the fire, wounding another son in the house.

Young Dobson has not been apprehended.

Quit Using 'U' After 'Q,' Writer Urges

LONDON, July 8.—He is a bold man who endeavors to reduce the English alphabet to order or consistency. A writer in The Imprint suggests that the letter "q," the clown of the alphabet, should be dispossessed of the inseparable "u" which always follows it. "Q" has no sound apart from its "u." Why, therefore, trouble to write two letters when one will do?

"Why not abolish "q" altogether? the logical may ask.

GIRL IN CLUB SHOOTING FREED

Thompson, Man in Case, Bound Over for Carrying Concealed Weapon.

A war of extermination upon the Atlanta "locker clubs" that are violating the law was declared by Recorder Nash Broyles Tuesday afternoon at the inquiry into the mysterious shooting at the Owls' Club last Friday night, when Captain A. C. Thompson, County Warden, was wounded by his companion, Mrs. Lucy Ballue, of 18 Lynch Street.

Recorder Broyles called upon the police department to make a rigid investigation of the conditions at the Owls' Club after Captain Thompson had admitted that he did not have his own private locker at the club.

The inquiry into the shooting mystery was unproductive of sensations. Captain Thompson and his young woman companion of Friday night both asserted that the discharge of the revolver was accidental and was unprovoked by a quarrel.

Woman Is Exonerated.

The case against Mrs. Ballue was dismissed. Thompson was bound over under $200 bond on the charge of carrying a concealed weapon.

Recorder Broyles, however, took occasion to severely scare Harry Latham, court deputy, for his part in the apparent attempt to keep the whole affair secret from the police.

The Recorder asked Latham why he had tried to hush the matter up. Latham replied that he did it at the suggestion of Thompson, whom he wished to protect.

"You have a queer idea of an officer's duty," exclaimed Recorder Broyles. "If all of the officers thought it was their sole duty to protect other officers in their wrong-doing we would had a sadly remoralized system."

Recorder Is Aroused.

The Recorder's attack on the locker club system came when he had Thompson on the stand. He plied Thompson with questions as to the conditions under which he obtained liquor at the club. Attorney George P. Whitman, representing Thompson, and W. M. Smith, representing Mrs. Bellue, objected on the ground that the questions were irrelevant.

"I'm making this investigation in the interests of law and order," retorted the Recorder. "If there are violations of the liquor law I intend to find it out. I advise the police to investigate the club and see if the members have private lockers as required by law, and their personal stock of liquor."

Chief Beavers said after the trial of Mrs. Ballue and Thompson that he would make the investigation. He intimated that he could not investigate the Owls' Club without investigating the others, and that a hot locker club crusade was in imminent prospect.
