

MAAHEDED BY HOUSTON, TEX, POLICE AS PHAGAN SUSPECT DENIES KNOWLEDGE OF CRIME

Last night, shortly after midnight, the officer went to the place, Brown answered a knock at his room door, and then, after a moment, he opened the door and looked through the doorway at the officer.

Holds Knife in Hand.

"Who are you fellows and what do you want here?" he asked.

The officers answered that they wanted to talk to him and he then invited them into his room. He kept a distance from them, however, and held an open knife in his right hand. Brown appeared nervous throughout the conversation of perhaps fifteen minutes, but replied to all queries promptly and to the point.

"When one of them told him to consider yourself under arrest," he coolly answered, "that's all right, but you've got the wrong man."

Brown closed his knife and handed it to an officer and sat on the side of the bed. To one officer he pointed out the trunk and suitcase—a small affair in the nature of a traveling man's.

As the officers looked at the trunk, Brown lifted out clothes—some nice ones that indicated a well-to-do man—and these, with the trunk, cards and pictures, were piled on the floor.

"If I had a gun you never would go through that trunk," said Brown. "The things in there are mine, and not yours. I don't know anything about this affair and you'd have to show me more."

Steadily Denies Crime.

Officers talked to him for more than an hour at the police station, but Brown steadily denied any knowledge of the killing of the young girl. He continued to show perseverance, though, and frequently inquired of the detectives why he should be treated the way they were doing him.

"If I had the least suspicion that this would happen to me, I would not have been in Houston, this long," he said. "I would have left here Sunday night."

Brown was taken from the room house to the police station and was placed in a cell across the hall from the "Chief of Detectives" office. He slept but little and did not undress to go to bed. This morning he was at the "cell door early and looked haggard."

Brown complained of being hungry. He declared that he was tired and most worn out. He walked the floor nervously, then sat down on the side of his cell. Next he stepped to the railing and inquired if he was going to be allowed to starve to death of would he be given some breakfast. About 8 o'clock, he was told that he was to be given breakfast.

He was given a breakfast of private officer with chief of Detectives, and Detective Andrew F. Shelly. He admitted that he lived in Atlanta and had been in Houston to Houston, but stoutly denied that he even knew Miss Phagan.

Only Interested, He Says.

When shown the pictures in his trunk and grip, he said he knew a number of persons, including several who were in the trunk. He said that some of them were "Mary Phagan" or "Miss Phagan."

Brown well educated. Brown is 22 years of age and has light hair. He is well dressed and well educated. He is a native of Houston, Texas, and is a member of the Houston Transfer Company. He claimed this was his first visit to Atlanta.

HUGH DORSEY, Solicitor General of Fulton Superior Court, now bending every effort toward the solution of the Phagan mystery. He is following every clue, and in every way exerting all his powers and ability in clearing the baffling case.

Solicitor General Hugh Dorsey.

Phagan Case and the Solicitor General's Power Under Law--Dorsey Hasn't Encroached on Coroner.

By a GEORGIA LAWYER.
It is a hard task to say as some people have been saying in Atlanta of late, that Solicitor General Dorsey has encroached on the coroner's office, or that he has "stepped in" on the coroner's business in any way.

It would be equally untrue to say that the commanding general in a battle had "stepped in" on a captain's business, when, as the battle progressed, the general gave directions of one sort and another to the captain as to his conduct.

The truth of the matter is, Solicitor General Dorsey has been in charge of the Phagan case ever since it was brought to light.

Murder is a crime against the sovereign State, and not particularly against the city of Atlanta or the county of Fulton. It is a crime against the State, and it is a crime against the State, and it is a crime against the State.

A coroner is a public officer of the State, and he is a public officer of the State, and he is a public officer of the State. He is a public officer of the State, and he is a public officer of the State, and he is a public officer of the State.

The coroner is a public officer of the State, and he is a public officer of the State, and he is a public officer of the State. He is a public officer of the State, and he is a public officer of the State, and he is a public officer of the State.

GIRL FEES FROM UNLOVED FIANCÉ

Emily Douglas, of Daytona, Fla., Arrested Here, Says Mother Tried to Force Marriage.

A story of flight to escape marriage with a man she did not love was told to the police Tuesday morning by Miss Emily Douglas, a pretty 18-year-old girl from Daytona, Fla., after she had been arrested at the Terminal station as she alighted from the Cincinnati and Florida Limited from Louisville, Ky.

According to the story the girl told Police Captain May, her mother, Mrs. M. Douglas, had tried to force her to marry a man who lives in Chicago, Ill. The would-be bridegroom, Miss Douglas says, is many years older than she.

"I told mama I did not love him," the girl said, and she said "I would marry him any way. She said he would make me a good husband. But I wouldn't marry a man I didn't love, so I ran away. I don't want to get married any more. I want to be free."

The girl left her home early yesterday morning. An hour later her disappearance was noticed, and P. W. Havel, a detective, was sent to look for her. He found her in Atlanta, where she had been hiding for several hours after she had been taken from her home in Daytona.

Havel has volunteered to take her home to her mother, but she has refused to do so. She has said that she will stay in Atlanta until she can find a way to get home.

The men battled early all night long, but the police were successful in getting her home. She was taken to her mother's home in Daytona, Fla., and she was released.
