SUSPICION TURNED TO CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk, Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full force upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected admission last week that he had written the notes found behind the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are rife in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the deed to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machanic at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man. It may have been Conley, or another negro. Mrs. White was asked to pick Conley out of a crowd of twelve negroes some time ago, but her identification was a second choice.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to a dissection of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, tinsmith of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty in the factory on several occasions; that his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley? According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 1 in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember any when he saw during that time to hear up his statement. From 2 o'clock until 5 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that from 5 until 8 o'clock that night he was down town; this also has not been established. Conley states he stayed there the remainder of the night.

Conley's claim in making this confession until 8 o'clock, when he returned home, seemed likely is another link against him.

His detailed account of the incident of the note writing, in which he even went so far as to attempt a quotation of what Frank said to him, is another premeditation on the negro's part, it is argued, and further that the story was concocted by Conley while he was in prison. However, the negro's killing brain was not capable of making it strong enough to withstand a light investigation.

E. F. Holloway, tinsmith and foreman of the National Pencil factory, seen to-day by a Georgian reporter, said he was confident the negro, under arrest at the factory, had written the notes which were found on the body of Mary Phagan, murdered at the factory.
